Tough Talk On Energy Due Tonight

By J. P. SMITH
and DAVID S. BRODER
Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The president's message to Congress pointed out that "our energy resources are not inexhaustible, and yet we are permitting waste in their use and production." He called for "legislation to carry forward a broad national program for the prudent utilization and conservation of the nation's energy."

That was Franklin D. Roosevelt addressing the 76th Congress on Feb. 19, 1939. Tonight, 38 years later, after uncounted failures by seven predecessors, President Carter takes up the challenge of convincing Congress and the country that now really serious steps must be taken to protect the United States' energy supply.

The president has decided to ask Congress for a standby gasoline tax — perhaps as high as 50 cents a gallon over the next decade — as part of the energy conservation package, administration officials said today.

The present federal tax on gasoline is 4 cents a gallon. Officials said Carter will seek authority to raise the tax by 5 cents a gallon per year over a span of 10 years.

The Carter speech to the public at 5 p.m. (PST) on all U.S. radio and television networks, his address to Congress Wednesday and the package of legislation that will go to Congress the following Monday represent what Hamilton Jordan, Carter's top aide, calls "the greatest test of the president's political leadership."

No issue in American life is more complex substantively or more dangerous politically than energy. It touches literally every voter, every state and region, every industry.

But if you had to boil down two brief sentences why so many presidents from FDR on have seen their energy plans shot down in flames, you could quote energy consultant Jack Bridges.

It was three years ago that Bridges, a former congressional staff member, was making the rounds on Capitol Hill with a three-dimensional model showing the inexorably widening gap between energy demand and supplies.

After finishing his briefing on the drastic steps that would be needed to close the gap, Bridges says he was told by one New York congressman:

"You're asking me to vote for things that will cost my constituents money and make life less convenient, and they won't see any benefit from it for the next five elections. And I'll tell you something else. If I do what you want, the last four of those elections I'll be out."

6% PAY HIKE FOR POLICE

VANCOUVER (CP) — Vancouver's 950 policemen have accepted a new one-year contract within federal wage guidelines.

Police spokesman Const. Mike Flynn said the agreement provides a six-per-cent pay increase for a first-class constable, bringing the monthly salary up to $1,581.

Ice Talk On TV Reviewed

The CBC is reconsidering the use of microphones near players' benches during hockey telecasts.

The review is being conducted after viewers across Canada heard Philadelphia Flyers' captain Bobby Clarke yell an obscene remark at referee Bruce Hood during the third period of Sunday night's game against the Toronto Maple Leafs.

Clarke's angry comment came after Hood threw one Flyer out of the game and penalized a second Philadelphia player.

The Flyers won 6-5 in overtime.

A CBC spokesman in Vancouver said nine protest calls were received.

CBC Toronto got 27 calls, Ottawa got two calls and CBC officials in other Canadian centres were still counting other calls today.

"A lot of protests were phoned in," a CBC spokesman said in Toronto. "A lot of children were watching the game."

Asked whether the CBC is reconsidering the use of sound equipment near players' benches, he said the network is reviewing the situation.

The calls to the Vancouver offices of the CBC regarding Clarke's language were the first about comments made by players, a spokesman said.

One caller wanted to know whether the microphone "can be moved further away from the foul mouth of Bobby Clarke."

In an earlier Flyers-Leafs contest, viewers heard Clarke mouth an obscenity when he came back to the players' bench after ending a shift.

Petty Arson Plagues Victoria Firefighters

Small arson fires continued to plague the Victoria fire department over the weekend, and officials are concerned about the tie-up of equipment and manpower.

Firefighters Saturday night responded to a number of false alarms and two small fires in the 500-block Yates.

These followed five small arson fires Friday night.

A fire crew was returning from a false alarm on Gorge Road just after 8:30 p.m. Saturday when it was redirected to extinguish a blaze in a commercial gargage container behind the Meatmarket restaurant on Yates.

Six minutes later, the fire crew rushed into the adjacent Yates Street parkade to fight a fire which gutted a car, causing about $1,000 damage.

Fire officials believe all seven fires Friday and Saturday nights were deliberately set.

Deputy Chief Mike Heppell said today that these fires take equipment and manpower away from their centrally located stations, and could cause a delay in responding to a serious fire where lives are endangered.

There is also the constant worry of an accident every time a large fire truck is driven through downtown traffic, he said.

The fire department is urging merchants and property owners, particularly in the city's downtwon area, to clean up refuse and rubbish since arsonists often set blazes in garbage disposal areas.

$8M Subsidy For Ferries

An $8 million federal subsidy was announced today for ferry, coastal freight and passenger service in B.C.

Under a federal-provincial agreement, the province will decide which services receive financial assistance.

But even as Premier Bill Bennett and federal Transport Minister Otto Lang announced details of the agreement in Vancouver, a squabble erupted over where the money should be used.

Victoria tourist officials demanded that some of the cash be used to cut ferry fares to the Lower Mainland and residents of mid-B.C. and upcoast communities like Ocean Falls said they should get all the cash.

"This isn't a luxury for us, it's a necessity," said Al Demers, chairman of the Coastal Transport Action Committee, a pressure group which has been lobbying the government for improved service for almost a year.

Demers said today there may be some desire to divert some of the federal subsidy to Lower Mainland routes but the money must go to the mid and north coast.

The federal government last year abandoned its traditional subsidy to Northland Navigation, a private company providing freight and passenger service to the Ocean Falls-Bella Bella area.

The provincial government stepped in to provide an interim service but residents have been unhappy with the setup.

"We suffered through this winter with poor transportation, but we can't go on like this," Demers said.

"They are crippling our communities."

Demers said he hopes to see a new ferry system set up by this summer because "we just can't make it through another winter."

Pete Tomlinson, a director of the Central Coast Regional District, said he feels regional representation on the ferries board of directors would certainly help the situation.

Bennett announced directors from the middle and upper coast areas will be appointed to the board of the B.C. Ferries Corporation. A cabinet meeting Thursday will discuss allocation of the funds.

Lang said the $8 million doubles the amount formerly given to private companies in subsidies which were discontinued last fall.

"We are delighted with this agreement because it deals with the long-standing complaint about lack of ferry services," said Lang.

"We have accepted B.C.'s approach with this form of assistance as a connector to northern areas.

"It will be a decentralization of services and there will be one authority for better administration."

The agreement will be reviewed after a five-year period. The federal contribution next year will equal the $8 million subsidy adjusted to the consumer price index for the city of Vancouver.

Philadelphia Flyers have become the great escape artists of the National Hockey League playoffs. They demonstrated their magic for the second straight game Sunday in Toronto, scoring three times late in regulation time and clipping the Maple Leafs 6-5 in overtime. MONTPELIER, Vt. (AP) — Vermont has launched a campaign to lure business from the uncertain political and economic climate of Quebec. The state development agency will open an office in Montreal next month and plans an advertising campaign aimed at encouraging Canadian business expansion.

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — Jack Munro, regional vice-president of the International Woodworkers of America, said Sunday that employees in the forest industry should tell employers they are fed up with the way things are being done.

"We've got to keep cool and prove we are serious," said Munro in a speech to the annual convention of the union's Local 1-424. "Tell your employer this every day."

Munro forecast a difficult year for the forestry workers, who sit down with management today to negotiate a new industry-wide contract.

Munro repeated the union's demand for a single master agreemnt for the entire province, a suggestion that companies in the coast and interior regions of the province have rejected.

"We want one agreement and one pension plan, not three," he said, adding that employers in various regions of the province are trying to maintain their own little kingdoms at the expense of the working man.

Dave Stupich, finance minister in the former New Democratic Party government, told the convention that unions must become more active politically to fight detrimental legislation.

Unions have a responsibility to work in the political arena, he said.

Don Muirhead, president of Local 1-424, warned that employers in the province are still hoping to impose some form of right-to-work legislation.

"If they ever succeed," Muirhead said, "this province will see the biggest strike action ever taken."

Munro said right to work legislation, which would abolish closed union shops, should actually be called "right to scab legislation."

Meanwhile, Don Lanskail, president of the Council of Forest Industries, called on the provincial government for a tax break.

Lanskail said Sunday the province should come up with a more equitable forest in-

Cautious Optimism Felt

SALISBURY (Reuter) — Foreign Secretary David Owen of Britain has left an air of cautious optimism here that the future of Rhodesia can be settled peacefully.

But in black African capitals he visited during his week-long tour of southern Africa, which ended Sunday, the predominant view is that a settlement without bloodshed depends on the nationalist guerrillas being prepared to compromise.

The five "front-line" states facing Rhodesia—Botswana, Mozambique, Angola, Zambia and Tanzania—by deciding to recognize only the Patriotic Front of Robert Mugabe and Joshua Nkomo as black nationalist successors to Ian Smith's white-minority Rhodesian government have strengthened the front's bargaining power.

But Owen was quoted by the Angolan news agency during his visit to Luanda Sunday as saying "I must consult all nationalist opinions and I am sure that six million people that are going to live under the new constitution will also want their voices heard."

The Patriotic Front said in a statement issued in Dar es Salaam on Saturday that Britain has no intention of transferring power to black Rhodesians.

In Prague on Friday, Nkomo called the constitutional conference proposed by Britain "another futile exercise which Owen himself knows will end in failure."

Owen avoided criticism of the guerrilla movement, telling Rhodesian television viewers Sunday that "nationalists who embraced the cause of war are essentially men of good will being driven to take up arms."

Although their supporters believe those who have chosen armed struggle represent the force of nationalist opinion, he will have to consult all liberation movements, Owen said.

Rats, Mice Increase, but No Epidemic

By MARK HUME
Times Staff

Because of B.C.'s mild winter and spring some lower mainland public health officials are gearing up for population explosions among rats and other pests

But Victoria area experts say there's no reason for alarm here.

S. F. Condrashoff, a biologist who runs Professional Ecological Services, says he's noted an upswing in calls recently from people faced with rat or mice problems, "but while the increase is noticeable, it's certainly not an epidemic."

Condrashoff said that while the mild climate may help rats and mice in their reproduction, "the weather's not likely to make that much of a difference year to year — it's almost always mild here on the coast."

He said that the real key to rat population is not so much climate as food availability. When there's lots of food there'll be lots of mice and rats.

Condrashoff said that people who experience rat problems this spring should attack the pests in three ways.

The first move, he said, is to seal up all cracks, crevices and drainholes that will allow the rodents access to a building.

The second step is to remove any material the animals might utilize for nesting purposes and to isolate any food sources.

The final step is to trap out those animals which were inside the building when all the openings were sealed.

Condrashoff stressed that trapping the rats while leaving some accesses for them "is like leaving the screen door open and killing the flies as they come in."

Esquimalt's municipal engineer, Mac Campbell, says there's been a slight increase in the number of calls from people with rat problems in his municipality, "but really it's very minor — it's by no means an epidemic."

Campbell said the mild winter and spring would probably mean rat and mice populations would increase this summer but he wasn't expecting the increase to be too significant.

WORKED TO DEATH, U.K. MPs COMPLAIN

LONDON (UPI) — Members of Britain's parliament today complained their work is killing them.

"It is more than the human frame can bear," said Mrs. Renee Short, a Labor member of parliament, following the weekend death from a heart attack of Sir Peter Kirk, 48.

His death was blamed on pressure and overwork. Kirk was a Conservative member of the House of Commons and his party's top man in the European parliament.

"The strain of representing a constituency and doing a job in Europe is too much," said Kenneth Baker, Kirk's selection agent. "We are needlessly sacrificing valuable people."

Kirk was the sixth member of parliament to die in two years, all of heart trouble.

Flood Emergency Lingers at McMurray

FORT McMURRAY (CP) — A state of emergency continued today as the 18,000 residents of this Athabasca oil saids boom town feared flood waters might return.

Flooding began Thursday when 20 feet of water spilled into the northeastern end of town, forcing 1,500 people to evacuate their homes.

The flood resulted when the Athabasca River was blocked by an ice jam and water flowed up the Clearwater River and into the town.

"The new danger is from the Clearwater itself," said Chuck Knight, town administrator. "It might break up any time now and ice might jam the already congested Athabasca."

Traditionally, the Athabasca breaks first, followed a few days later by the Clearwater.

A channel to allow the water to drain was blasted in the 12-foot-thick ice on the Athabasca on Friday and Knight said late Sunday the water had fallen six to eight feet since then.

"Some people have returned to their homes but it is without permission," he said. "While we hope the worst is over, we must be prepared."

A team of six Alberta Disaster Services assessors flew into town Sunday and began damage estimates.

"We are looking at an overall flood cost of $3 to $4 million," Knight said.

Hugh Horner, deputy premier and minister responsible for disaster services, visited Friday and said the province will reinburse residents for 80 per cent of their property losses. The municipality will receive 100 per cent reimbursement for damage and loss, he added.

Staff at the town's daily newspaper — Fort McMurray Today — worked through the weekend to produce a special edition Monday.

Publisher Peter Duffy, 34, said most of his newsprint was destroyed but the presses are in working order.

Claire Peden, 68, a member of the town board, said Sunday that property damage might have been avoided if the provincial government had made more land available to the town. He saiid it was "sheer stupidity" to allow people to live at the confluence of two rivers as big as the Athabasca and the Clearwater.

Patty to Plead 'No Contest'

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — Attorneys for Patricia Hearst agreed today to enter a plea of no contest to charges of assault with a deadly weapon and robbery in a Los Angeles shooting incident and the prosecution agreed in return to drop the remainder of the charges against her.

The surprise move was made by defence lawyer Albert Johnson at a hearing before Superior Court Judge William B. Keene.

Miss Hearst had been scheduled to go on trial here May 18.

ZAIRE PUSH GAINS GROUND

KINSHASA (AP) — President Mobutu Sese Seko's troops have driven the invaders in southern Zaire back 15 miles and checked their advance on Kolwezi, the copper-mining centre, the government news agency AZAP says.

The government report said Zairean troops launched a counter-offensive Saturday night and captured arms, medical supplies and one wounded prisoner.

There was no confirmation of the government's claim.

It was not known whether any of the 1,500 Moroccan troops supporting the government were involved in the fighting, but reporters returning from the area said 400 of the North African Arabs were sent to the village of Kanzenze, 25 miles northwest of Kolwezi, where Zairean troops were confronting the rebels.

AZAP said the government forces recovered some of the weapons they lost when an estimated 2,000 Katangan exiles from neighboring Angola crossed the border on March 8 and overran a third of Shaba province.

Shaba was Katanga province when Zaire was the Congo, and the invaders are led by veterans of the late Moise Tshombe's unsuccessful attempt to separate the province and its mineral wealth from the rest of the country in the early 1960s.

Members of the Lunda tribe, the principal tribe in the region, are believed to have joined the invaders.

The French government announced that the 11 French cargo planes that had been flying supplies to the Moroccans in Shaba have finished their work and returned home.

In New York, the Long Island newspaper Newsday reported that the CIA is secretly supporting efforts by David Bufkin of Kerman, Calif., to recruit several hundred mercenaries in the United States and Britain to fight for Mobutu. But diplomatic sources in Kinshasa said it would be "political death" for Mobutu to bring white mercenaries into the conflict.

$8M for Ferries Less Than Expected

full responsibility for the supervision of services in freight and passenger ferries in the coastal waters, and for any interim subsidy to Coast Ferries Ltd. which now services about 100 coastal communities.

In Victoria, Visitors Information Centre president Ken King said he will press for an immediate ferry rate cut when he meets with Provincial Secretary Grace McCarthy on Tuesday.

King said some Victoria businesses report tourist revenues are at their lowest ebb in five years.

"The situation is not good, especially for the local tourist attractions," he said.

King stressed he would stick with his announced policy of working with McCarthy, minister in charge of the department of travel, rather than directly with Transport Minister Jack Davis.

He said he hopes McCarthy can convince cabinet that the rates must be reduced immediately.

Don Nixon, manager of the Visitors Information Centre, said Victoria has a strong case for a ferry rate reduction. The number of visitors to Victoria so far this year is down from 1976 and the sharpest drop is in visitors from the Lower Mainland.

Empress Hotel manager Ted Balderson said the federal grant has been given to B.C. Ferries in recognition of the fact the routes between Vancouver Island and the Lower Mainland are part of the Trans-Canada Highway.

"It would not be appropriate for the provincial government to apply all of this grant towards service to the north coast. That is clearly not part of the Trans-Canada Highway."

Balderson said he recognizes that $8 million is not a large subsidy but only a small rate cut would be necessary, as long as it is applied in the most efficient way.

Hotel revenues during the first two weeks in April were below those of the same two weeks one year ago, he said.

At the causeway bureau, Nixon expressed disappointment at the number of visitors so far this year.

"We are optimistic about 1977 but so far it is just hope. In fact, we are worse off this year than we were at the same time in 1976.

"We feel things will get better because of the favorable exchange rate on the dollar for Americans and in view of a promotional campaign we a promotional campaign we are planning. But we are at a low point at the moment."

Carter Deals Tonight With Energy Problems

That same political reality has been very much on the minds of the Carter men in these final days of shaping his energy message. Sitting in his White House office the other afternoon, with Dvorak's "New World Symphony" on the stereo, staff chief Jordan mused:

"The history of complex problems in this country is that they have to touch people very intimately for them to act. The problem with energy is that public opinion is so fickle."

That has been the case. During the Arab oil embargo and the subsequent steep rise in oil prices, both Richard Nixon and Gerald Ford saw moments when they thought the public and Congress were ready for strong measures to curb energy use and increase energy production.

The mood passed too quickly for action, and those opportunities vanished. Now it's Carter's turn. As Rep. Thomas Ashley (Dem.—Ohio), the House leadership's choice to head the ad hoc committee that will try to steer the Carter legislation to passage, says of the President:

"He's got to put himselfon the line on this one ... Congress, because of its instincts, is only willing to be so far in front on this issue. So he's got to go out there and say, 'We're not at war, the breezes are blowing and it's a sunny day. But things are not well.' And he's got to make it stick."

Just because it is so complex and touchy, energy is an issue that's inherently "presidential." "There has to be leadership," says Senate Majority Leader Robert Byrd (Dem.—W. Va.), "and it can't come from the 535 people up here."

Carter probably makes some points by tackling the issue head-on. He will get more credit if he succeeds to a degree in passing his program. By moving early, he gains time to recover from any political wounds he suffers, if, as seems certain, there is heavy infighting along the way.

But even acknowledging all that, there is substantial truth in White House press secretary Jody Powell's contention that "if re-election was the only consideration, I can't imagine anything less worthwhile to get involved with than the energy issue."

Public opinion analysts, including the President's own pollster, Patrick Caddell, say the hardships of last winter have made the American people more aware of energy shortages. But convincing them they must make sacrifices themselves to solve the problem, Caddell says, "is still a great leap of faith."

Making that leap is Carter's immediate challenge. But it's only the beginning of the political tests in this issue. If he is able to mobilize public opinion for more than a moment — and that is a big "if" — he must then convince senators and representatives, who understandably view the energy problem from the narrow perspective of their own next election and the interests of their own constituents and contributors, that it is politically safe to take risks greater than they have been willing to take before.

Even then, Carter faces an exquisitely difficult task in negotiating and enforcing the political and policy trade-offs in his program. Congress has become increasingly sophisticated on energy issues in the past five years, and those issues cross-cut in ways that make the achievement of a majority coalition all but impossible.

Regional differences pit heating — oil-importing homeowners of New England against the oil-rich Southwest, car-conscious California against subway-riding New York. The coal interests jostle the advocates of nuclear, geothermal, solar and natural gas — and none of them coexists easily withthe consumer spokesmen environmentalists. The doctrinaires of the free market disagree with the devotees of stiff federal regclation.

Mix in a little Middle Eastern politics, a dash of Ralph Nader righteousness, a passel of left-over Carter campaign promise and the fact that two of the key congressional committees are headed by men who one year ago were Carter's leading rivals for the Democratic presidential nomination — and you have a concoction that might well explode in the president's face.

dustry tax structure to help defray the cost of using lower-quality logs for the manufacture of pulp.

Forest Minister Tom Waterland told the annual meeting of the forest industries council last Thursday that he expects changes in the industry. He described the industry's use of high-quality peeler logs for pulp manufacture as a "criminal luxury."

Lanskail said the industry accepts the criticism and is making changes, but said it's going to cost money to do it. He said the government could help the industry pay for it by relieving the industry of some excessive taxation.

Officer Reluctant To Shoot Dogs

Wildlife protection officer Jack Lenfesty said today he would be reluctant to shoot at deer-killing dogs in Fort Rodd Hill Park.

He said in a built-up area such as the park, the problem of marauding dogs is better left to police and local animal control officers.

In the past two weeks at lest four deer have been run down and killed by dogs at Rodd Hill, according to commissionaire Luther Johnson.

The Wildlife Act entitles a game officer to destroy dogs that kill deer, but Lenfesty said the chief problem is in identifying the dogs.

"Besides," he said, "why punish the dog? It's the owner who's at fault."

A protection officer is required to advertise in three consecutive editions of a local newspaper that any dogs found running during a specified period in a cited area may be destroyed.

But Lenfesty said it is difficult to find a witness who can identify an offending dog and is willing to give court testimony.

As for the protection officer himself obtaining first - hand evidence, Lenfesty said this is virtually impossible due to the delay between the alleged sighting and his arrival.

Lenfesty is responsible for all of southern Vancouver Island and part of the Gulf Islands.

Control and licensing of dogs in the unorganized area encompassing Fort Rodd Hill is a provincial agriculture department responsibility at present.

Livestock commissioner John Pelter said a broadened program covering dog control and domestic animal protection would reduce the likelihood of unlicensed dogs running deer.

He said a number of charges of harboring unlicensed dogs have been laid in the Metchosin area and he said when his local control officer returns from duties in the Gulf Islands he will look into the Rodd Hill situation.

CBC: How About It?

The public has six days left in which to comment on how the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. is fulfilling its radio and television role.

A committee of inquiry set up by the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission is asking for letters to help it report on the CBC's mandate by July 1, and letters should be sent to the CRTC by April 25 — next Monday.

Secretary general Lise Oulmet said the committee would appreciate having comment that is "as factual as possible."

Remarks should be directed mainly to public affairs, news and information programming, and the committee wants to know how the public feels about the CBC's achievement of balance, the serving of geographic and regional needs of French and English and how the mandate might be carried out in future.

Letters should be addressed to the secretary general, CRTC, 100 Metcalf Street, Ottawa, Ont., K1A 0N2.

IMF Bails Out Italy

PARIS (AP) — Eight countries, including Canada, have agreed to provide most of the $530 million in standby credit sought by Italy through the International Monetary Fund to shore up weaknesses in the Italian balance of payments.

The United States is contributing $98 million and West Germany 82.5 million. Other contributors are Japan $62 million, France $35 million, the Netherlands $20 million, Belgium and Canada $16 million each and Sweden $8 million.

Under the agreement, Italy has to reduce the number of loans it makes, limit its budget deficit and curb the cost of living.

"If Italy cannot keep within these ceilings, the credit will be suspended and further consultations between the Italian government and the IMF will take place," officials said Friday.

However, they said Italian proposals for economic recovery should bring about important changes in the coming months.

'START-UP' GRANT FOR McPHERSON

The first of what is hoped will be a number of grants to the new McPherson Playhouse Foundation was made known today when Recreation Minister Sam Bawlf announced a "start-up" grant of $10,000 from the Cultural Service Branch of the government.

The grant is intended to provide an incentive for the foundation to pursue its original concept of seeking a wide range of financial support through other levels of government, the business sector and the community.

The foundation, which has its author, Allan M. Purdy, as chairman with a representative board of citizens, officially took control of the operation of the McPherson Playhouse on April 1.

Bawlf congratulated participants from the community and Victoria City Council on the effort which went into establishing the new foundation.

In announcing the grant, Bawlf said, "Since this project has the full support of the entire arts community, it should be a progressive step toward achieving closer cooperation of all arts groups in this city. The benefit to Victoria could very well be greater access to cultural funding from public and private benefactors."

A cheque for $500 has also gone forward to the foundation from the Community Arts Council of Greater Victoria.

the weather

Cloud cover was variable across the province overnight with a few areas nearly clear. Isolated showers were present along the south coast.

A high level weather system will give a few showers as it crosses the province today. Otherwise there will be a mixture of cloud and sunshine with showers continuing along the coast.

A weakening weather system will bring rain to the north coast later on Tuesday. Elsewhere a Pacific ridge of high pressure will give clearing skies in some areas. Showers will persist in eastern regions.

Concorde Protest Falls Flat

NEW YORK (Reuter) — New Yorkers opposed to Concorde flights here say they will return to Kennedy Airport on foot or bicycles in future efforts to shut down the airfield.

The threat was made Sunday when protestors were unable to tie up the airport. They had predicted that about 2,000 cars would turn up, but only about 500 motorists went to the airport to drive hooting and two abreast at about 10 miles an hour for two hours.

A similar protest in February last year attracted about 2,000 cars and jammed access roads.

Police of the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey, which administers Kennedy, foiled Sunday's protest by breaking up the caravan into wide gaps in the roads leading to various terminals and kept traffic moving.

Officials said airline passengers were delayed only about 45 minutes in leaving and arriving at the airport.

A Port Authority spokesman also commented that reports of the protest kept away the hundreds of New Yorkers who like to drive to Kennedy on sunny Sunday afternoons to watch planes.

This meant there were fewer cars there than on a normal Sunday.

The protesters said they staged the drive-in to give vent to their frustrations over Concorde and to influence federal Judge Milton Pollack when he hears arguments on April 28 on a suit brought by British Airways and Air France. The airlines want the court to force the Port Authority to grant landing rights for the supersonic jet.

The Port Authority has not decided whether to let the plane land here in spite of a decision last year by then-Transportation Secretary William Coleman to grant test flights for 16 months at Kennedy and Dulles Airport outside Washington. Concorde has been landing at Dulles—which is operated by the federal government—since last May.

Air France and British Airways say New York landing rights are essential for the economic success of Concorde.

Protest organizer Joe Ewald, who lives near the airport, insisted that Sunday's protest was a huge success.

"It's the most succesful to date," he said.

Another leader told an airport news conference: "We may come back on foot, on bicycles, or drop out of helicopters. We'll come back every Sunday if we have to."

Torturers Let Off: Amnesty

LONDON (AP) — Amnesty International has accused the Greek government of inadequately punishing persons employed by the former military dictatorship to commit acts of torture.

The human-rights organization said while action in some cases has been adequate, security police who tortured prisoners were treated leniently and some still hold high military positions.

It said other torturers escaped with light prison sentences or their prison terms were commuted to fines.

There was no immediate comment from the Greek government.

Amnesty International, an independent organization with headquarters in London that has made political prisoners around the world its special concern, said the military regime overthrown in 1974 used torture regularly to enforce its authority.

A trial in 1975 of 14 officer and 18 enlisted men of the military police led to 16 prison sentences, including three of 20 years or more.

Sanjay Gandhi Kept in India

NEW DELHI (AP) — India's new government impounded the passport of former prime minister Indira Gandhi's son Sanjay and named a judge to investigate his financial dealings and alleged abuse of Mrs. Gandhi's influence.

The confiscation of the passport prevents Sanjay, 30, from leaving the country.

Newspapers said the government also picked up the passport of Bansi Lal, Mrs. Gandhi's defence minister. Home Minister Charan Singh indicated the reports were correct.

H.R. Khanna, a former Supreme Court justice, was named to head the investigation into Maruti Private Ltd., the big automobile plant set up by Sanjay with government assistance which never started production.

Former justice Jagmohan Reddy was named to head an inquiry into Lal's dealings. The former defence minister was one of Sanjay's closest associates and is accused of arranging the sale of the land for his automobile plant at far below the market value.

Another former member of the Supreme Court, former chief justice J.C. Shan, was named to head a third investigation into other excesses and abuses of power during Mrs. Gandhi's 21 months of emergency rule that ended with her defeat in the parliamentary election last month.

Middle Class Marijuana

In the wake of the LeDain commission on drugs nearly five years ago the federal government promised to lighten penalties for marijuana possession. Two years ago a Senate bill to lighten cananabis sentences died on the order paper, and there the matter remained although millions of middle class Canadians continue to smoke the weed, risking fines and imprisonment. One recent questionnaire showed that more than 70 per cent of the students at Osgoode Hall—Canada's most prestigious law school—admit to smoking marijuana, and a majority of this number plan to go on smoking the hallucinogen after they graduate.

Adding fuel to this fire, the prime minister hinted recently that he smokes the odd bit of marijuana when he is out of the country, saying that a person who smokes a joint of marijuana for personal pleasure should not be hassled. When oblique testimonials come from such high places it makes enforcing an unpopular law very difficult for the police and courts.

Now the government, according to Justice Minister Ron Basford, is considering whether to draft new marijuana legislation or reintroduce the Senate bill of two years ago. The old bill proposed moving marijuana and its derivative, hashish from the Narcotics Control Act to the less harsh Food and Drug Act. Under the Narcotics Control Act a marijuana possession conviction can mean a fine up to $2,000 and imprisonment up to seven years, although most first time offenders are fined between $200 and $300. A conviction for possession under the Food and Drug Act would mean a fine of $500 for first offenders and up to $1,000 for subsequent offences. No imprisonment or criminal records would result from convictions.

It is popular logic today to endorse legalization of marijuana. Critics point to a hypocritical government that condones and profits from the sale of two other drugs, alcohol and tobacco, but won't legalize "pot." The argument has a thread of logic in that alcohol and tobacco fatten government revenues by about $2.5 billion each year, or more than $1,000 for each man, woman and child in Canada. But such logic is specious when you consider the intangible human and other costs in terms of social problems and medical costs that directly result from the widespread use of these two legal drugs. To add a third drug to the legal list would be idiotic folly.

It is interesting to note here that when marijuana was almost strictly the diversion of long-haired teenagers it was an evil thing, a manifestation of the hated hippie generation. Now that the middle class is puffing merrily away, it is seen as a harmless pleasure, analogous to three martinis on a Friday night. Both can be fatal, as medical statistics and police reports have shown time and time again. At the same time penalties for simple possession of small amounts of marijuana or hashish are too harsh. It is also ridiculous to charge a person growing a small patch of the stuff for personal use with "conspiracy to traffic."

Certainly the time is long overdue when marijuana should be transferred to the Food and Drug Act. It is not a narcotic like heroin or morphine and its inclusion under the Narcotic Control Act of 1937 was an ignorant oversight. Nor should first time offenders be burdened with a criminal record for a pastime that millions of Canadians have at least tried. Fines might even be reduced to less than the current penalties under the Food and Drug Act. That's about as far as the government can go in good conscience at this time. And hopefully the issue will go up in smoke as Canadians, including the prime minister, come down to the less esoteric real problems the nation faces today.

"... Harold's determined not to use pesticides this year ... but he's doing everything he can to encourage the vegetables to be strong and fight back against the bugs ..."

PREP and the Numbers Game

By the usual hyperbolic standards of the minister of human resources, Bill Vander Zalm's announcement last week about his Provincial Rehabilitation and Employment Program was quite modest. Then, he has a lot to be modest about.

That's not an original line, but skepticism must be the operative term in examining the minister's claims for PREP. They were originally rather extravagant, promising 2,000 jobs a month. Now the program is placing an average of about 1,000 welfare recipients a month.

The latest figures show that 7,474 welfare recipients have been placed in jobs since PREP began last July. "The figures are particularly impressive," as the minister noted, but only on the surface. Like a shimmering desert mirage, they begin to break down the closer you get.

First, the program is claiming jobs that were found by or through federal Manpower offices. As many as a quarter of the placements claimed by PREP job-hunters are Manpower listings. But PREP is getting welfare recipients out and into the workplace, and whether the jobs are found by Manpower or PREP is of little importance to the individual who gets one.

Second, who is PREP counting and how often? Are these all full-time jobs? The minister doesn't know, but the opposition in the legislature says PREP is counting very job, whether for a day or a week or a month, and individuals who get two or three different jobs all in a couple of weeks get counted two or three times.

If true, then PREP's figures are far from an accurate representation of the facts. The only accurate measure should be the number of person-days or -years created by the program, and how many former welfare recipients stay off welfare after getting work through PREP.

And these statistics are not being kept. Vander Zalm says his staff is going to gather more information on the jobs and the clients brought together by PREP. These figures should be at the top of the list of material they're looking for.

'Incomes Should Be Cut'

OTTAWA — A man whose advice was once called the most valuable in Ottawa has just added his voice to those warning that real Canadian incomes are rising too quickly, will have to slow down and may even have to fall back somewhat.

That hard warning was contained in a speech by James Grandy, now a consultant but formerly a senior mandarin. The glowing view of the quality of his advice came from A. A. Ritchie when, as senior official at the external affairs department he said he would rather consult Grandy on a difficult problem than any other man in Ottawa.

Grandy's reference to the rapid rise in Canadian's real incomes — that is, with the inflation element removed — was contained in a speech to a group of financial executives which was basically optimistic, provided the country does not attempt any easy short-cuts out of its economic difficulties.

Grandy believes that the difficulties facing the country at present demand a clear priority for more investment to modernize and expand our capital plant "and thus improve our productivity and our ability to compete."

No Discipline

"It must involve at least a slowing down in the growth of real personal incomes, and perhaps for a short time, an actual decline in real incomes."

That of course raises a vital question: why should Canadians accept slower improvement in their real incomes for the sake of industrial investment? There will certainly be some efforts to avoid anything of the sort when controls come off. Grandy puts the case against lack of economic discipline as cogently as anyone writing or speaking about the nation's problems today.

The recession of 1974-75 was milder in this country than in most others and as a result "it took some time for us to recognize a hard new reality — that the underlying problems afflicting our economy were, if anything, more critical than those of many other industrial nations."

Canada's competitive position has actually been deteriorating since 1970. That year, our adverse balance in manufactured goods fell below $3 billion. During both of the last two years it has been running at more than $10 billion. The overall payments deficit was almost $5 billion in 1975 and nearly as high last year. This is what people are talking about when they say that Canada is losing its ability to compete and is living collectively beyond its means. It has met the deficit by very heavy foreign borrowing and here is Grandy on that subject:

"These substantial deficits were not associated with a heavy flow of capital goods with which to build up our productive capacity. They reflected, in the main, large imports of goods and services to sustain high levels of consumption ... these deficits were financed by heavy long-term external borrowing ..."

Grandy, of course, points to other sources of our problems but that is how we have been living collectively beyond our means and why the increase in real incomes should at least slow down and perhaps even been reversed — because much new investment is essential to getting out of the mess and total resources are limited.

JAMES GRANDY
... tighten your belts — again

"A good recovery is developing in the United States, our major market, and we need to put ourselves in a position to exploit it. Investment in Canada has fallen behind for some years. Many projects have been planned, only to be postponed. These need to be revived and new plans developed. If businesses see better prospects of profit, a more favorable tax regime, the end of direct controls and generally an environment that restores confidence I have no doubt about their response."

Grandy, fortunately, is among those who are not afraid of the word "profit" which became seriously unfashionable in Ottawa a few years back, as much as anything through the extraordinary success of David Lewis' "corporate welfare bums" campaign. But this is essentially a market economy, despite a larger role for government here than in some countries, notably the United States. Profits are essential to the successful operation of a market economy and we will not get rid of our unacceptable level of unemployment without them.

"A lower Canadian dollar has the effect of reducing our real incomes and bringing us more in line with what we are really earning as a nation ... the effect of devaluation will show up in higher prices for imports of goods and services. We have to accept that consequence and not try to offset it through seeking higher money incomes. If we fail to show the necessary self-discipline in this respect — or in other respects including our reaction to the removal of controls — it will be left to the monetary authorities to decline to print the extra money."

He's Optimistic

Why, given the seriousness of our problems, is Grandy basically optimistic? He believes that "there is too much pessimism around us, and indeed a sense of defeatism."

"With the possible exception of gas and oil, the notion that Canada is running out of natural resources has no foundation. We have good transportation facilities, good communications and strong financial institutions. We have power utilities as competent and efficient as any in the world. In basic manufacturing such as steel or aluminum we remain competitive. In our more labor intensive secondary manufacturing the picture is a mixed one.

"The proportion of people of working age to total population is the highest it has ever been in our lifetime. In other words, the number of dependents ... is unusually low."

Those are solid reasons why a nation should feel confidence, although this one clearly does not. Solid reasons provided, as Grandy says, people avoid seeking easy ways out and accept difficulties on the way back to recovery. Grandy does not make many public speeches but his are important contributions to the useful discussion, or dialogue, that is developing outside government and policitics.

Frail Economy

Think positive, smile, the best is yet to come! These are a sample of the concise phrases that Travel Minister Grace McCarthy is espousing when meeting with tourist groups in the province. She comments on the virtues of B.C., that we are so fortunate to live in this "milk and honey" province where, she claims, there is no pollution, a beautiful climate and no bugs.

Well, Mrs. Minister, the biggest bug and irritant to the people and the economy is Jack Davis and his ferries — which the minister so skilfully avoids as a possible reason for the decline of tourism in her presentation. Not once during her recent 60-minute pitch did she ever allude to the B.C. Ferries.

McCarthy's department is spending thousands of extra dollars this year to stimulate tourism. While the tourism department purports to be spending extra money to attract tourists, Jack Davis' department is increasing his ferry income a thousand fold and at the same time driving away the tourist with the exorbitant ferry rates. It's just too much of a coincidence to think two departments of our government can be this counterproductive. Another way of keeping the tourism industry quiet while the government makes hay.

The Lower Mainland represents 48 per cent of the total tourist traffic on Vancouver Island.

This latter statement, above all, has the greatest impact. How many of the 48 per cent have visited Vancouver Island since June 1, 1976 (Jack Davis Disaster Day)? The volume of tourist business in Victoria slipped tremendously last year and already in 1977 many businesses are off another 25-30 per cent. How can the frail economy of this Island withstand two disastrous years of tourism? Will the government allow its third largest industry to befall the same fate as did the mining and the lumber industries?

I appeal to the entire community, since it is not only a few motels, restaurants or attractions that are affected, the true impact is rippled through the entire economy of this Island. As the spending power of the tourist-oriented businesses is drastically reduced, so are the services they would normally require from outside sources. So Victoria, wake up! As B.C.'s third largest industry is affected, so are you. Think about it!— Wayne E. Wagner, 2983 Baynes Road.

Only Comments

I refer to an article in the Victoria newspapers reporting on the meeting of Saanich council earlier this month. In this article, Ald. John Mika was quoted as having stated that he received from me "a very circumspect civil service answer" in reply to a letter from Saanich which was addressed to me March 23. Ald. Ian Cass is quoted as having said my letter "tells us nothing — the manager has not answered our question."

I would just like to place on record that the letter from the municipal clerk did not pose any question. It simply asked for my comments, which I gave. — C. Gallagher, General Manager, British Columbia Ferry Corporation.

Crime Fears

In a recent article, U.S.: Violent Crime, (March 30, Malumo wrote that in the U.S., "every year criminal records are broken" and the rate of crime in New York "has risen by more than 300 per cent over the past six years."

This type of article contributes to an unwarranted fear of crime among the population. If true, it would be sensationalism. But, it is worse than this because the article was wrong.

In fact, FBI figures for the United States show that the total crime rate in the United States decreased from the preceding year in 1972, and remained unchanged in 1976 Moreover, the murder rate has decreased within the United States during each of the last two years, as it also did in New York in 1976. As for alleged 300 percent increase in New York crime over six years, in 1970 there were 601,800 "index crimes" compared to 658,147 in 1976.

Fortunately your stories are generally accurate, unlike this one.—Daniel J. Koenig, Associate Professor, Department of Sociology, University of Victoria.

Czar's History

I would like your readers to know that the town and district of Czar, Alberta, is writing a history. We want to contact former residents to get historical facts and stories for the book. School districts covered are Arcola, Big Gap, Birdsview, Buffalo View, Connaught, Custer, Czar, Daisy, Good Luck, Horse Haven, Laconia, Lakesend, Little Gap, Metiskow Lake, Opal, Pansy, Sandhurst, Sather, Teat Hills, Violetdale and Wheatridge.

I would be pleased to hear from former residents who would like to help with this book. — Maisie Hobbs, Publicity Chairman, Czar Book Committee, Czar, Alta.

Praise for Phil

Re the article April 4 on Phil Gaglardi, I do not know the man personally but while minister of highways he completed a major role.

He knew machinery and was most able and the proof is to date in the miles of great highways which he completed in darn close to record time. Mr. Gaglardi has proved his ability.

Although perhaps outspoken, that is what we need in our politics of today, and the sooner the better. In my humble opinion, this man should be given the commission and the backing to prove his point as he requests. I for one am in favor. — James R. McLaren, 959 Balmoral Road.

PM's Staff

As a teacher who is presently paying back several hundred dollars as the result of an AIB rollback from 11 to eight per cent annual salary increase, I find a CP story from Ottawa about Mr. Trudeau's office staff very interesting.

According to the story, his 86-person office staff received total annual salaries of $1,551,196. One year ago, when he had 98-person staff, the total was $1,457,155.

This is an average one-year increase per person of $3,168.23, or over 21 per cent. Think how much money Mr. Trudeau's staff will owe when the AIB rolls them back to eight per cent.

Unless ... — John Fraser, 764 Transit Street.

Marijuana Penalties

On Thursday, April 7, it happened again! The taxpayers were assigned another $75,000 debt by a judge in Courtenay. That money could be far better utilized in the construction or maintenance of a day-care centre on the island than the way in which it will be wasted, by sending a confessed marijuana dealer to prison for the next five years.

Law may be rooted in fiction as well as fact. Indeed, a public policy conceived in ignorance may be continuously reaffirmed, ever more vehemently, so long as its origins remain obscure or its fallacy unexposed. Yet once a spark of truth ignites the public opinion process, the authority of time will not stay the flames of controversy. What a shame this controversy must be carried on while millions of tax dollars go down the drain and countless thousands of lives are damaged beyond repair.

For God's sake, Canada, look at your priorities. In a period when we were told we didn't have enough equipment to rescue troubled fishermen in dangerous waters, the police spent thousands of dollars and utilized helicopters and coast guard craft to apprehend an individual hauling a few hundred pounds of an innocuous herb. Now, in order that the myths be perpetuated, we are ordered to spend another fortune to maintain this individual in the most unhealthy atmosphere yet devised by North American society, the Canadian Prison System, for the next five years. — George Baker, West Vancouver.

Lifeblood

An employee of one of Victoria's major attractions, I have only too clear a picture of the extremely depressed state of the tourist industry in and around Vancouver Island.

When the ferry fares to Vancouver Island and the neighboring Gulf Islands were doubled last June, the tourist flow was effectively stopped dead in its tracks. By the end of the season figures proved that only two-thirds of the expected tourists to Victoria finally arrived. On the Gulf Islands the situation was much worse, for they depend largely on local traffic from Victoria and Vancouver to make up the bulk of their tourist trade.

It is well known that much of the mainland tourist traffic has rediscovered the charm of the Okanagan or been enticed into the state of Washington. It may take years for the visiting yachts to return to our islands. After all, the American San Juan Islands are just as beautiful as ours and their prices much more attractive. By then the damage will have gone deep. It's already "touch and go" whether many resorts and marinas along our coast can survive yet another depleted season.

Bring the ferry fares down before the season commences, Mr. Davis, and give this depressed area a shot in the arm by attracting tourists, our lifeblood, back again. Or do we have to watch for another year while the restaurants, motels and stores join the rest of the business community in their struggle for the privilege of becoming bankrupt in beautiful B.C. — Mrs. Gillian P. Levy, 1051 Deal Street.

Absurd

Someone in a letter defended Human Resources Minister Bill Vander Zalm, under the pseudonym Justice, in which the author mentions "the terrible hardships which he (the honorable minister) and his parents endured during the years of the German occupation of the Netherlands." The author further mentions personally knowing people who suffered a similar fate and then reflects by stating that the very poorest family on welfare in B.C. live in luxury compared with those who lived in the Netherlands during the Second World War.

Reading these statements forces me to point out their absurdity. The fact that Mr. Vander Zalm at one time resided in a country occupied by enemy forces is completely irrelevant to his present post. Further, to compare people who receive social assistance in whichever province of Canada with people living under the dictatorship of brutal invaders is ridiculous.

The author's defence of Mr. Vander Zalm leads me to believe that there is a kinship involved as far as country of birth is concerned. Although I consider the remarks made rather ludicrous, I do commend the author for the loyalty expressed towards Mr. Vander Zalm and greatly admire the spirit which accepts a "poverty bracket" income and a reluctance to accept financial aid in a time of depression.

I wonder, however, since the author did disclose the hardship suffered by Mr. Vander Zalm and his family during the years of enemy occupation, whether the author considered at any time that among the recipients of social assistance, other than the younger age group, are the same men and-or their families who fought overseas to make the liberation of people like Mr. Vander Zalm possible at great personal sacrifice?

A fact of which many of us must be reminded, "least we forget." — J. MacInnes, 203-1341 Hillside Avenue.

Crime and Responsibility

B.C. Pen prisoners . . harsh sentences not needed?

By ROBERT NIELSEN
Toronto Star

Some common sense has just surfaced, near the top level, on the subject of crime and punishment.

Criminals should be regarded as personally responsible for their behavior, and for changing it. They should not be viewed as being primarily victims of bad social or economic conditioning or of personality disorders, except in the case of criminally insane.

That's the word from a committee of high-ranking officials of the Canaidan penal system who proposed to drop emphasis on the rehabilitation of convicts as its main goal.

Hopes Dashed

As a term drawn from medicine, "rehabilitation" implies that offenders are sick through causes beyond their control. Given the nature of the symptoms — criminal conduct — it further implies that the state has the right, even the duty, to impose treatment.

Whether rehabilitation has failed in Canada as some critics say, or hasn't been given a fair trial as others maintain, the optimistic hopes of its early advocates have certainly been disappointed.

Judged by the continued high rate of repeating offenders, called recidivists, our prison system is more likely to confirm people in criminal behavior than to turn them away from it.

Countries noted for thoroughness in humane reforms haven't had much success with rehabilitation either. Sweden, for instance, still has a high rate of recidivism despite many liberal innovations in dealing with offenders. To underline the personal responsibility of the offender is not to deny that bad social conditions may influence people toward crime, but merely to state that crime is finally a matter of individual choice.

To downgrade rehabilitation doesn't and shouldn't mean abandoning efforts to reform criminals, or — as the committee would have it — offering them opportunities to change themselves. Redemption is all-important to an individual and a symbol of hope to society. We all need to believe that our better selves can triumph, and ex-criminals occasionally provide dramatic evidence of it.

But rehabilitation or reform of offenders would deserve first priority among the objectives of the criminal justice system only if a high rate of success were assured. In that case it would be the surest way to reduce the number of crimes and criminals. We now know that it is a difficult business, without guaranteed results.

That being so — and in the face of rising crime rates — we probably ought to reassert two older priorities of criminal justice: Retribution and deterrence.

Retribution is often confused with revenge, and consequently deplored by gentle souls, but the two are quite different. Lawful retribution is a measured penalty for an act which society itself has proscribed as harmful. Revenge is private and knows no rules; it is often capricious and wildly disproportionate to the wrong, or fancied wrong, that provoked it.

Retribution is necessary to assure society that justice is being done; the law-abiding are cheated when a lawbreaker escapes it. But the great practical importance of punishment is its deterrent effect on people who might otherwise be tempted to commit crime. And we do need to be deterred, for most of us are not nearly as different from certified criminals as we would like to think.

Deterrence requires that crime carry such a high risk of disagreeable consequences that rational people will not be tempted to engage in it. New research in Canada indicates what the essentials are.

In a study of property crime, economists Kenneth Avio and C. Scott Clark found, as expected, that increased risk of capture and conviction leads to lower crime rates. But they were surprised to discover that severity of punishment — as measured by length of sentence — apparently makes no difference.

Avio and Scott say more studies are needed to confirm this, but it's plausible. For a respectable middle-class person, to be arrested, tried and convicted would be such a disgrace that the length of sentence could hardly increase the humiliation. And the vast majority of Canadians regard themselves as middle class.

These findings should be about equally comforting to both the hardliners and soft-hearted on the subject of crime. For they reinforce the vital importance of catching and convicting criminals, while suggesting that harsh punishments are not generally necessary to protect society.

The horrendous crime rates in American cities reflect a low-risk situation for criminals. Arrests have declined as a proportion of crimes, and convictions have declined as a percentage of arrests. The U.S. criminal justice system has become so unbalanced in favor of defendants, and so indulgent toward petti-fogging objections, delays and appeals by their lawyers, that it offers the criminal excellent odds on getting away with it. A state prosecutor said that of 87,000 felony arrests in New York city, only 900 defendants were tried to the point of reaching a verdict (although many pleaded guilty to reduced charges).

Steady Increase

The picture in Canada is not that bad, although crime rates have been rising steadily for many years, and only a minor fraction of total crimes results in arrests. The U.S. experience should caution us not to go overboard on defendants' rights as compared to the citizen's right to go about his business or leisure without being mugged, robbed, burgled or defrauded.

Combining the principle of individual responsibility with the new findings about deterrence, we might be able to make the criminal justice system work more fairly for society and more constructively for the offender.

To illustrate, let's consider the case of Shamshudin Kanji, the Tanzanian immigrant who was gravely injured when attacked by two young men in the subway. The Criminal Injuries Compensation Board granted him its maximum award of $15,000, and three cheers for that — although the amount certainly cannot be called generous if he is crippled for life, as doctors fear.

Meanwhile his attackers are serving prison sentences of 21 and 16 months. At about $15,000 per year per prisoner, their incarceration will cost the taxpayer some $45,000 if they serve their full terms. Counting the award to Kanji, the cost of their crime to the state will reach $60,000. And if they are typical, they will be no less crime-prone on release than when they went in.

The principle of personal responsibility might require them to repay the province for the award to Kanji; in effect, they would be making restitution for the harm they did him. And if they were considered not dangerous to be at large, it would be logical to cut short their prison terms so they could earn the money.

Restitution could be ordered in many cases of criminal injury, as well as for losses due to robbery and theft. It is now usually left to the victim to sue for damages, a proceeding that is often not worth the trouble.

A practical problem about restitution is that many offenders couldn't afford to pay a lump sum of any size. This could be solved for some by letting them pay by instalments, with wage attachments if they failed to keep up.

Make Them Pay

Fines could also be more widely used as an alternative to prison, even for serious crimes, as they are in Holland and Scandinavia. To bear equally on rich and poor, they should be so many day's or weeks' pay, not fixed sums. Jail should await those who reneged.

Paying up for their misdeeds might be as chastening to criminals as imprisonment, and it could hardly be less corrective.

Gastown's Ousted Derelicts Fight Back

By JOHN CLARKE

VANCOUVER — When Vancouver City Council a few years ago began cleaning up the old warehouses and flophouses of Skid Road, it turned one of the most blighted areas of town into a magnificent example of urban renewal. It kept the old name, Gastown. But Gastown now is bright with boutiques and nightclubs, little museums and some of the best ethnic restaurants on the coninent.

But in doing so the city drove the derelicts, rubbies and welfare victims out of a community they called home. At the same time, it brought in a cleanup program in an effort to upgrade the sleazy hotels and rooming houses where these poorest of the poor lived. It set up a couple of clinics, a drop-in centre and one or two other facilities to help them.

The program, however, did one other thing which City Council hadn't bargained for. It politicized the derelicts. They saw themselves as the victims of the big money that went into Gastown. They saw their community being chopped down in size and they couldn't do anything about it. They had no lobbying power because they hadn't enough money to finance an association to act as their spokesman and they couldn't get anybody at City Hall to listen to their side.

It wasn't enough that they were being helped by church and city social workers. They wanted a voice of their own. With the help of a Local Initiatives Program grant, the Downtown Eastside Residents Association (DERA) was formed by some of the workers at First United Church. It grew and has been able to run its own affairs largely through City Council grants. It represents 8,000 down-and-outers who exist on $160-a-month welfare in run-down hotels and rooming houses in and around downtown.

Where some lost their 'homes'

Only about 15 per cent of them are classed as rubbies beyond rehabilitation. The others, most of them single men and many of them injured or diseased from work in B.C. resource industries, genuinely try to keep off the booze and away from beer-parlor parties and back-alley fights. But it's tough to pay rent of $110 to $115 a month out of that welfare allowance and keep body and soul together as well.

The hotels they stay in aren't covered by provincial rent controls because they don't come under the Landlord and Tenant Act. With no money left over, they need help to finance DERA.

DERA has had no trouble getting City Council grants — until this year. Some of its leaders ran in the last civic election for the Committee of Progressive Electors (COPE) against The Electors Action Movement (TEAM), the dominant party at City Hall.

They didn't get elected. But they were accused of using DERA as a platform for a jump into politics and DERA was seen as an emerging political rather than community organization.

Several weeks ago City Council turned down a DERA request for $36,000 to pay the salaries of three social workers and immediately became the target for a barrage of criticism.

The council didn't want to dispense public funds if they were going to be used for political purposes. But DERA sees political action as a logical extension of its duty to "lobby" for those 8,000 down-and-outers. It accused TEAM of rejecting the grant to protect its own political interests. And it said TEAM was denying DERA leaders their civil right to run for office.

It's not that simple, of course. Because it represents the chronic poor, DERA isn't like any other community association. It needs financial help from city council, which is also the most direct target of its lobby for the poor. Whatever the stated purpose of the three social workers, there's no question they would be influenced by the political attitudes of DERA.

In the end, council gave in to the pressure and approved the grant. But it clearly won't be the end of the fight. Council, afraid that the grant may be taken as a precedent for other community associations, will be carefully watching the three social workers. If there's the slightest hint of political activism on their part, council and DERA will be fighting again — and the 8,000 poor could be forgotten.

War of the Decibels

russell baker

There was no doubt what France's response would be to New York City's refusal to let the Concorde land at Kennedy Airport. The French had delivered their ultimatum to Mayor Beame. It spoke of an insult to the honor of French aerodynamics. At dawn France would be at war with the city of New York.

Mayor Beame conferred through the night with Felix Rohatyn, Victor Gotbaum and Albert Shanker. They knew they could expect no help from the United States. The American government had repeatedly made it clear that New York must solve its own problems. The question was whether Great Britain, France's ally in the Concorde crisis, would come in on France's side.

It seemed improbable. Britain, after all, was even more threadbare than New York and unlikely to court bankruptcy for the sake of defending Gallic aerodynamic honor.

While the war council was still meeting, the French launched their surprise attack at dawn. It fell on the Pelham Parkway section of the Bronx. Two French Concordes, flying in take-off mode, cruised over the target laying down a bombardment of noise which shattered every window in the Christopher Columbus High School on Astor Avenue.

The principal was still wading through the glass at noon when a second strike was delivered against Staten Island. Because of a navigational error, however, the Concorde dropped most of its noise load on New Jersey, cracking the mirrors in a dozen Perth Amboy saloons and disrupting a labor shakedown in Bayonne.

France had evidently calculated on swift victory from a demoralizing lightning strike, for its military leaders surely recognized that it was poorly equipped to sustain lengthy combat against a city with such formidable weapons as New York could ultimately wheel into action.

Despite renewed Concorde attacks on Bensonhurst, Bayside and Riverdale, however, New York stubbornly refused to surrender. In a gallant retaliation, four of the helicopters that service the Pan American building were diverted from their regular duties and sneaked in under French radar to attack Marseilles. French casualties were immense, with more than 15,000 deafened for periods of up to 36 hours after the raid.

The French decided to escalate by flying four Concordes over the Empire State Building. The resulting vibrations failed to bring down the famous landmark, but did severely disrupt television reception in all five boroughs.

Next day, an incensed New York retaliated by bombarding and completely burying the Eiffel Tower with 20 megatons of MAC bonds.

Although staggered and clearly up against overwhelming superiority, France gallantly fought on. Embittered by the ferocity of New York's warfare, it rounded up all New Yorkers on French soil and forced them into the best hotels of Paris where they were soon reduced to bankruptcy.

New York responded with matching savagery during "the night of the dark cabs." All Frenchmen on New York soil — Frenchwomen were spared — were put inside New York taxicabs and, throughout the night, driven at normal cab speed over the city's potholed streets until they lost consciousness.

As barbarism advanced, Beame, Rohatyn, Shanker and Gotbaum secretly prepared for the New York invasion of Normandy. Their plan called for assaulting the beach with an armada of tugboat-nudged barges transporting the entire New York subway system. Once ashore, they would sweep down the Seine and replace the Paris Metro with the New York subway system.

Fortunately for France, the invasion was stopped on the outskirts of Versailles when the subway workers went on strike to dramatize their discontent with their pension program. The French knew, of course, that this relief was only temporary, and asked for negotiations.

In the ensuing talks, Mayor Beame proved a brilliant diplomatist by not insisting on a French humiliation.

"We will accept your Concorde at Kennedy Airport," he told President Giscard, "if you, in turn, will accept something from us."

"But of course," said Giscard. "You have but to name it."

"If we take the Concorde," said the Mayor, "Paris, in return, must accept every dog in New York City."

Giscard blanched. "It would be the end of the glory of Paris," he said.

"That's pretty much how we feel about having the Concorde in Queens," said the Mayor.

This is why Paris is still the world's most beautiful city and New York is still almost tolerable for human habitation.

RCMP ALREADY HAVE FLAT-TIP BULLETS

VANCOUVER (CP) — Expanding bullets, which the British Columbia Police Commission has asked Attorney-General Garde Gardom to approve for 12 municipal police forces in the province, have been standard issue for use in RCMP revolvers since last September, according to an RCMP spokesman.

The so-called semi-wadcutter bullets have flat tips which expand after impact and tend to remain inside victims.

The round-nosed bullets they would replace tend to go right through a person and may strike someone else.

'User-Pay' Fare Rapped

WINNIPEG (CP) — The Canadian Association of primary air carriers has called on Transport Minister Otto Lang to give the north relief from his "user-pay" policies.

The call was made in a resolution passed at a meeting of the group on the weekend.

The resolution asked for special government help to improve air services in the north and assurances that national transportation policy would be used as a tool of economic development.

Lang had told Atlantic premiers in February that government services and subsidies would be changed to assist that region. The primary air carrier want similar help for northern Canada.

Law Reformers Rap Inquiries Act

OTTAWA (CP) — The Law Reform Commission of Canada, with a dissent from its vicechairman, has proposed that the Inquiries Act, under which it estimates 1,900 commissions have been held since 1867, be replaced by a new one.

Vice-chairman John C. Bouck, who has since quit the commission and returned to the British Columbia Supreme Court, says a case hasn't been made for repeal of the existing act.

Mr. Justice Bouck says the commission's working paper, made public today, refers to the Inquiries Act as deficient, unsound or inadequate.

"Yet, there are few examples, if any, of actual situations where these allegations can be shown to have substance," Bouck says. "Therefore, most of the criticism becomes just a matter of opinion."

The commission chairman is Antonio Laner, a justice on leave from the Quebec Superior Court. Other commissioners are Gerald Le Forest and Jean-Louis Baudouin.

The Bouck dissent includes a reference to his dislike of the commission's proposed evidence code, which would do away with legal precedent as the basis for decisions on what evidence can and cannot be admitted.

Bouck, saying he disagrees with many provisions in the proposed code, objected to its application to proceedings before commissions of inquiry.

The commission will hear public comments during the next few months before making recommendations to Parliament.

Its proposed new act would distinguish between advisory commissions, which would deal with broad policy issues, and investigative commissions, which would have broader powers but would give more safeguards to individuals.

Advisory commissions would be unable to compel evidence under oath, force production of documents or enforce attendance of witnesses. Such commissions would be able to hear and finance individuals or groups with strong interests in the inquiry.

Investigatory commissions would have broader powers and could, under the proposed act, order search warrants and imprison witnesses who would not give evidence. However, enforcement of such powers would be done through the courts.

"The idea that commissions of inquiry should have direct powers of enforcement, as is the case in some provinces, is firmly rejected," a news release accompanying the working paper says.

The law reform commission would give witnesses the same privilege not to testify as they would have in court. It would enable them to cross-examine those who have testified against them, whether or not they have been witnesses themselves.

Hostage Crises Police Trained

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government is training hundreds of police officials from across the United States to use the tactics of waiting and talking in efforts to free hostages held by terrorists.

The Law Enforcement Assistance Administration said Sunday that more than 600 police commanders and administrators will be trained this year in hostage negotiation tactics in 15-day seminars.

LEAA is financing the training at the Illinois State Police Academy in Springfield with a grant of $297,000.

Dr. Harvey Schlossberg, a pioneer in the field of hostage negotiations and a recognized authority on the subject, is conducting the training.

He is director of psychological services for the New York police department.

Acting LEAA Administrator James Gregg said he hopes the program "will give our country a reserve bank of highly sophisticated negotiators, able to move in immediately in crisis situations."

Schlossberg trains the officers to play for time and use careful psychological planning in dealing with terrorists, the LEAA said.

"We've got forever if we need it," Schlossberg said. "We can't give a person back his life once he's been shot."

As the hours and days pass, the terrorist is more likely to fall asleep or to wind down from an emotional high pitch, scale down his demands and surrender, Schossberg continued.

Alert Public Replacing Lookout Tower

HOPE (CP) — British Columbia's lonely forest lookout towers are being forced out of business by aerial surveys and a vigilant public, says Forest Ranger Terry Quaite and are only used as a back-up system in times of extreme fire danger.

Quaite, who with partner Ross Thomson patrols the forests near this Fraser Valley town 60 miles east of Vancouver, said the public reports fires at all hours of the day and night.

"People are really good at reporting," Quaite said. "even at 3 a.m. they are good at calling."

Ten years ago, Hope had four fire towers, Quaite said, but new fire-watching techniques have left the area with only one for emergency use.

Most forest fires are caused by campfires, industry and sparks from the railway, but lightning can be a major problem. In 1975, there were 41 fires caused by lightning.

Neither Ross nor Quaite will predict the risk of fire this year.

"If we get a summer like last year, when it rained all the time, there won't be any fire season to speak of no matter what the snowpack is like," Thomson said. Last year, only 13 fires broke out compared to 71 the year before.

In a bad year, the service must deal with up to 100 fires, Thomson said.

Even in rainy weather a forest ranger keeps busy, Quaite said, checking proposed logging areas, updating maps and filing reports.

The Hope station is currently preparing a report on the history of logging in the area for presentation to a worldwide seminar on logging. The seminar, travelling in caravans, will pass through Hope in August, 1978.

6 Health Units To be Opened

NANAIMO (CP) — Health minister Bob McClelland says that six new health units will be opened in the province — at Nanaimo, Terrace, Prince George, Valemount, West Kamloops and Vernon.

The Nanaimo centre would be a $3.1-million project of 34,000 square feet located on a 2.5-acre site near the city's regional general hospital. Its approval is subject to agreement with the regional hospital district, which shares 20 per cent of the cost.

NDP PICKS ROSE

MAPLE RIDGE (CP) — The New Democratic Party has chosen former member of Parliament Mark Rose to contest the new riding of Port Moody-Mission in the next federal election.

Rose received 70 per cent of the 343 ballots cast at a nomination meeting in Maple Ridge.

This will be the fifth election for Rose. He had represented the old Fraser Valley West riding for two terms until defeated by Conservative Bob Wenman in the last federal election.

NDP house whip Lorne Nystrom told the meeting the NDP would win 50 to 60 seats in the Commons in the next election. Nystrom, who is the NDP agriculture critic, also called for a national food policy that would include preservation of farmland, enhancement of family farming and tariff protection.

Immigrant Children Problems Discussed

BURNABY (CP) — Children from immigrant families do not receive enough teachers' attention to help them keep up with students from English-speaking families, the British Columbia Home and School Federation's annual convention was told.

Panelists speaking on the problems immigrants have in the educational system also said non-immigrant children add to the problem because they are not taught to accept people from other cultures.

"Children born of other cultures are the same as Canadian children — they learn the same way" said Hannah Polowy of the University of B.C.'s early childhood education department.

She said teacher-training institutes need to take a closer look at the immigrant-student situation.

"I've had student teachers come from areas with a high immigrant population and tell me: I can't stand that school. The kids smell of garlic or curry.'

"You can't really blame the student teachers — they're having a difficult time — but they're not taught how to handle it."

Jim Gaskell, who teaches at UBC's faculty of education, said "Many ESL (English as a Second Language) students live in low-income areas" and that the schools in such areas are not as well-equipped with learning facilities as those in higher income neighborhoods.

"Schools in higher-income areas have better gym facilities, libraries, textbooks and so on," said Gaskell. "Yet research says it doesn't matter what the facilities are — that they don't affect the learning qualities of the schools.

"But schools are unequal in other ways — the curricula are often white, middle-class-oriented."

He said immigrant and other low-income students often do not do well in school because they need additional, not equal, resources to those required by upper-income, English-speaking students.

Jean Bennetti, a Vancouver Community College ESL teacher, said that because "immigration is a Canadian fact of life," there always has been and will be a need for more and better ESL classes.

"Unfortunately, only the parents are checked out when the families arrive in Canada — not the children," said Bennetti. "We never know if their children have a learning disability ... the adults are always taken care of, with English-for-new-Canadians courses, but there's none of that for the children."

Ban Urged On Shore Growth

KAMLOOPS (CP) A one-year ban on lakeshore development until its environmental effects are studied was called for by the British Columbia Interior Fishing Camp Operators Association at its weekend convention.

The group's resolution said government departments should take part in the study rather than only regional district boards.

The association, founded in November, 1975, includes the owners of 43 fishing camps in the Okanagan, Thompson and Cariboo areas.

Logging company representatives and an assistant provincial forester promised the camp operators they will be given advance warning when lumber companies plan to cut trees in their area.

Denny McDonald, B.C. Forest Service assistant forester, said the service is moving away from development of free campsites.

Camp operators were angry at free camps adjoining their commercial camps and competing with them.

LOG YARD ABLAZE

BOSTON BAR (CP) — Firemen fought for nine hours before bringing under control a spectacular blaze at the British Columbia Forest Products log storage yard in this Fraser Canyon community, about 100 miles northeast of Vancouver.

At the height of the fire, which broke out late Saturday afternoon, flames were leaping 100 feet into the air.

Volunteer firemen, aided by mill workers and other residents, battled the flames for hours before bringing it under control. There were no injuries and no estimate of damage is available.

Cause of the fire is unknown, but there were high winds yesterday and slash burning has been underway in the area for several days.

For a time, the fire threatened a 40-man bunkhouse and other buildings. Firemen and mill workers poured water on the bunkhouse for four hours before the fire was controlled. The bunkhouse suffered heavy smoke and water damage.

The Battle Of the Bulge

A Push Away From the Table Isn't Enough

By PAT DUFOUR
Times Staff

Nutrition Canada says 60 per cent of Canadians are too fat.

A Times survey shows that Victorians try to beat this problem of the affluent age in many ways.

There are those who depend on hospital outpatient diet counselling for guidance.

Provincial civil servants have their own obesity clinic in which to fight the battle of the bulge.

There's an obesity clinic run in the basement of one general practitioner's home.

Weight Watchers and TOPS (Take Off Pounds Sensibly) are another way of battling the bulges.

And there are those who agonize alone, living on starvation diets, juggling menus.

Professionals since the early 1970s have been using the phrase "behavior modification" when helping obese patients.

This means simply pushing yourself away from the table isn't enough.

Dr. J. E. Petersen explains at the obesity clinic which he and Dr. R. G. McLean run in McLean's basement that patients are taught to examine the faulty lifestyles that cause their obesity in the first place.

"There are all sorts of stimuli (for overeating)," he said. "The most natural one is hunger. Then there's watching television . . . but the biggest ones are emotion, boredom, anger and depression."

The two doctors have been running the clinic for four years. They began it because they both were overweight and aware of the problem.

Petersen at that time weighed 195 pounds. he peeled off 30 pounds, most of which have stayed off due to readjusted behavior patterns.

The two general hospitals both provide outpatient diet counselling services.

Mary O'Brien chief dietitian at Royal Jubilee Hospital reports 1,177 people were referred to them in 1976. Of these, 258 or 22 per cent were obese.

The percentage was almost double, 43 per cent, at the Victoria General Hospital.

Mrs. Joyce Nordwall, chief dietitian at the hospital, stresses that nutrition education should start early.

"More nutrition should start in the schools as soon as a child can read," she said. "Cartoons, for instance, would be a good way to do this.

"Many children have never had brown bread, as an example. I'm not saying white bread is no good at all, but the quality is no way as good as 100 percent whole wheat."

She said the reason 100 per cent wholewheat bread is so expensive is because, the demand being less, it is not mass-produced.

"In the Second World War Britain had a national loaf. They had to eat that. There was nothing else . . . and they were healthier," she said.

Nordwall said schools could help by getting rid of non-nutritious items, such as candy and soft drinks in vending machines, and replacing them with nutritious items, such as fruit juices.

Even the hamburger habit need not be a bad one, Nordwall said.

"If the hamburger bun is 100 per cent wholewheat, and taken with cole slaw and a glass of milk, it is a rounded meal," she said. "If children chose fish, French fries and cole slaw, that would be fine. Instead, they just take chips and gravy."

Weight Watchers has an established reputation among those who need help in fighting fat.

Mrs. Norma Barton, supervisor for Vancouver Island, reports WW has 109 branches in British Columbia with 6,500 people, ranging in age from 10 to the late 70s, taking part.

She, too, says WW is stressing behavior modification is the only way in which to take off pounds permanently.

"Diet is not the only answer. That isn't going to help much when the real problem is you can't stand your mother-in-law," she said.

"We're trying to teach people they must change their habits and get them asking 'How can I change my habits?' "

She said WW, through using behavior modification as part of its program, has been able to develop diets that are not as restrictive as ones used in earlier years.

Jane Noble, nutrition consultant for the provincial health department, is also convinced behavior modification is an important key.

"It's important to discover what type of emotion causes the problem. There has to be a complete change of eating habits," she said.

Provincial civil servants have an occupational health centre on Superior to help them grapple with obesity. It is open from 7:30 a.m. to 6 p.m. each work day.

Centre nutritionist Elspeth Charlsley reports industry and business are also seriously interested in providing such centres.

"Some large companies are thinking of doing it this way," she said. "They're finding they're getting much better attendance rates and much less illness."

Charsley said the provincial centre is still on a project basis.

Petersen and others working with obese patients stress that exercise is an important part of any reducing program. One man who has had success in hi weight-reducing program, agreed with Petersen that exercise is essential.

In the period from Jan. 2 to mid-March he went from 180 to 155 pounds. His weight remains stable.

He jogs a mile twice a week, swims and has a sauna once a week, and plays squash twice a week.

He cut out eating between meals, reduced the amount of sugar in his coffee from three to one spoon and drastically cut his starch intake for the

"But I had an added bonus," he admitted." There are four of us in the family and three of us were dieting. All of us, including my wife and daughter, lost weight."

Firefighters Accept 8%

Victoria city firefighters and the Greater Victoria Labor Relations Association agreed today on an eight-per-cent wage increase for 1977.

The agreement came only minutes after a binding arbitration hearing began this morning.

The union had originally sought parity with Vancouver firemen, but last week dropped that demand and requested the eight per cent allowable under Anti-Inflation Board guidelines.

Vancouver, however, just settled for a six-per-cent increase so the local firefighters' eight per cent brings them "very close" to their Vancouver counterparts, a union spokesman said today.

Meanwhile, the hearing continued to discuss fringe benefits. The firefighters are seeking first-aid pay equivalent to the IWA industrial rate.

They are also seeking improvements in the holiday structure and shift differential.

Firmer Leadership, Small Schools Urged

Canada's public schools should emulate the example of private schools in becoming smaller, adopting a basic curriculum, providing compulsory extra-curricular activities and emphasizing adult leadership and concern for the development of character, a Rotary conference was told Saturday.

Industrial consultant and educator H. C. Wilkinson, who is deputy chairman of the board of governors of Shawnigan School, said that until these five practices are accepted back into the public school system "the majority of children will be denied the education and training they need."

He was one of the speakers at a weekend conference in Victoria attended by 1,100 Rotary delegates from Vancouver Island and Washington state.

Wilkinson noted that while independent schools seldom exceed an enrolment of 300 students, small school units have become a rarity in the public educational system.

"They are victims of intensive teacher specialization in an ever-broadened curriculum, the attempt to spread fixed administrative costs over larger enrolments and, also, misplaced faith and pride in magnificent facilities and equipment."

Of the five essential practices. Wilkinson said the most crucial is firm leadership of children by principals and teachers.

"It pre-supposes that children should not be allowed to behave just as they wish, nor should they choose exactly how they will occupy their time. It infers discipline and standards.

"It requires guidance, example, supervision and control, not only in the classroom but at play and in their relationships with fellow students as well as adults.

"It has been strongly criticized and, in some school systems, almost totally eradicated."

Show Goes On

Two circus shows were held at St. Joseph's School grounds in Saanich on Sunday despite an accident the previous day in which bleachers collapsed.

There were no serious injuries. About six people, including children, were taken to Royal Jubilee Hospital and later released.

The Circus, Dewayne Bros. Circus of Seattle, was sponsored by the Victoria Unit No. 42, Army, Navy and Air Force Veterans of Canada. All proceeds will go to the organization's senior citizen housing project on Darwin.

Secretary-manager Harold Shepherd, who was at the circus when the bleachers collapsed, said today, "I was pretty scared. I thought there would be a bunch of broken bones but there were just a few bruises, that's all."

Shepherd said a prank telephone call might have contributed to the accident. A person had phoned, saying they represented the ANAFVC and cancelled the licence from Saanich to cover the circus shows.

When the group went to pick up its licence they were told it was cancelled.

A last-minute licence was granted by council before its Tuesday budget session because, Mayor Ed Lum said, the ANAFVC had already sold 6,000 tickets.

Normally, the licensing department processes it through the fire inspection office. There had not been time for this to be done.

Had it reached his department, fire chief Harold Gains said today, checks would have been made on crowd capacity, as well as fire exits and extinguishers.

Union Blocks Student Jobs —Official

Between 20 and 25 students may lose out on summer jobs because of the stand made by the Saanich local of the Canadian Union of Public Employees.

Municipal administrator Bill Tremayne said today the municipality will not be able to take advantage of the provincial government's youth employment program unless the union changes its stand on rates of pay.

Under the program, the students must be between 15 and 24 and would be paid at the rate of $22.50 a day. The Saanich local, however, insists the students be paid union rates.

Tremayne said Saanich had applied for the grant for such projects as traffic counts and cleanup work at bus stops.

"They would not steal any jobs from the union at all. It seems silly to stop these kids from getting jobs," he said, adding some of the students losing out might even be children of Saanich employees.

A union spokesman, who did not want to be identified, confirmed that Tremayne has written the union asking them to reconsider their stand.

"It has been the past policy of the union that anyone hired by the corporation is paid union rates," the spokesman said.

Refusing to be more specific, the spokesman said a "special executive" may be called on the matter.

Just When Does One Become a Tourist?

FOND THOUGH WE REMAIN of the Campbell River district where we live, there are times when my wife and I hanker to refresh our acquaintance with Victoria. And when we and other up-Islanders shove off for a holiday in Canada's most beautiful city, our rating auotmatically changes.

We become members of that sought-after species, the tourist.

We know it, but it's obvious that those concerned with the health of Vancouver Island's struggling tourist trade manage to remain unaware of the fact. Otherwise, they would open their eyes to a valuable though neglected asset and do more to foster it.

The same holds true in reverse. Our up-Island tourist people could go considerably farther than they do in attracting the Victorian-turned-tourist who points his rig north up the highway.

Far pastures may seem greener. When we think of tourists, we tend to define the breed as visitors with American or out-of-province plates on their vehicles. But I suspect the bread-and-butter of the trade is the Island-dwelling couple or family that seeks a change of scene on the home side of the Strait.

We are dependable. Like the salmon, we have a way of returning to our own rivers. But when we have spawned our dollars — which as a point of observation we seem to do more generously than our American counterparts — we don't necessarily fade away. We keep coming back.

Also, unlike the American tourist, our season isn't confined to the summer months. Nor are we affected by our provincial government's brigand ferry fares, which keep mainland visitors away from these shores in droves.

The American tourist, in fact, is pie in the sky. He may materialize, and he may not. Last year, his country's bicentennial celebrations helped keep his numbers down. Vancouver Island is only one of numerous holiday areas that compete for him.

He further differs from the typical Island rainbird, in that he is peculiarly sensitive to a bad-weather summer. After all, why venture north to be drizzled on when he can find sunshine in Arizona or Mexico?

In terms of tourist revenue, he is, has been and will remain an uncertain quantity.

But the short-haul tourist who likes to get about on his home island is always with us. Perhaps that's why an industry to which he makes a vital contribution virtually ignores him.

I resent that! As an up-Islander on tour in Victoria, I could stand considerably more wooing. If it isn't forthcoming, I may even be tempted to start by-passing Victoria for Seattle or Olympia, where the welcome is warmer.

The up-Islander who ventures south to British Columbia's capital doesn't expect red carpet treatment. What he would appreciate — and what he doesn't receive — is information that would make his stay more enjoyable.

He or she would like to know what's going on in the town.

If a high-rated entertainment is scheduled, let him know about it in time to shape his trip plans accordingly. The same for parades, celebrations, fairs, interesting sports events, flower shows, bargain days, and other city highlights that appeal to the close-to home tourist.

What attractions does Victoria offer to the visiting family? Where does one take the kids? What's to see and do? How do the prices run and what can the traveller of limited means expect for his dollars?

Those aren't hypothetical questions. As former Victoria residents, Win and I are asked them each year by up-Islanders who contemplate a holiday in Vancouver Island's only sizeable city, but hesitate because that city remains a closed package.

Modesty may be a virtue, but it can be overdone. The city with something to sell to its neighbors shouldn't be backward about letting the fact be known. In five years, the only tourist pitch from Victoria to come our way has been from a motor hotel that offers special rates to Christmas shoppers from these well-populated outlands.

Victoria could use more enterprise of that sort. The hotel manager recognizes the existence of a built-in, home-grown tourist trade that waits to be tapped.

When that discovery becomes general, and when it is effectively acted upon, I suggest there will be less crying of blue ruin in those off-years when the American tourist run is at low ebb.

IT WAS BOISTEROUS WEEKEND for racquet-wielding Tony Trabert, captain of United States Davis Cup tennis team, when demonstrators attempted to halt matches between U.S. and South Africa at Newport Beach, Calif. On Saturday, Trabert was swinging at interloper who disrupted play. On Sunday, Trabert was knocked to ground during scuffle in which he drew blood with racquet.

TRABERT FORGETS TENNIS MANNERS

NEWPORT BEACH, Calif. (UPI) — U.S. team captain Tony Trabert forgot the gentlemanly demeanor of tennis and used his racquet to pummel protesters who disrupted the U.S.-South Africa Davis Cup competition Sunday, which the United States won, four matches to one.

Four women and six men, protesting South Africa's apartheid policies, came down from the spectator section to the sidelines, chanting, and unfurled a flag.

Police Lt. Arb Campbell said one of the men ran into Trabert and bowled him over and Trabert struck back with a racquet, knocking the man down and drawing blood.

Trabert, who was not injured, said he and the team had gone to the bench when he saw "a gentleman come at me."

"I hit him once and then we saw another person zeroing in on me so I hit him at least twice. I'm not proud of what I did. I was just trying to defend myself, my team and those people around me. I haven't been in a fight for 30 years."

Trabert, 46, said he was certain the protestors were coming after him.

"They were zeroing in. One man when I was down tried to kick at me."

The 10 protestors, some in handcuffs, were taken to jail and booked on trespassing charges. A crowd of 6,200 was on hand for the final two singles matches in the tournament, which already had been clinched by the United States.

Saturday's game was also disrupted when two men ran out into the court and one spilled a carton of oil on the surface. Trabert chased after one of them and struck him in the back with his tennis racquet.

The two matches Sunday were delayed for 15 minutes.

South Africa's Ray Moore defeated Roscoe Tanner of the United States and America's Brian Gottfried defeated Bryon Bertram.

The United States meets Argentina, April 29-May 1, in Buenos Aires.

Moore said he was "a little surprised and somewhat unnerved" by the demonstration.

"And then when the crowd applauded for me along with Tony's personal intervention it was very moving," Moore said.

Bridgman Ignites Another 'Escape'

By The Canadian Press

Toronto Maple Leafs find themselves returning to the friendly confines of Philadelphia's Spectrum hoping the change of scenery will improve their Stanley Cup playoff fortunes.

Disbelief was the pervading mood in the Toronto dressing room Sunday night at Maple Leaf Gardens after the Leafs had let the Flyers off the hook for the second game in a row in their National Hockey League quarter-final series.

"It's unbelievable," said Toronto coach Red Kelly in the wake of a 6-5 Philadelphia victory that evened the best-of-seven series at 2-2.

"It's a shame when you blow leads like that when all you need is another three or four minutes."

In other games, Montreal Canadiens completed a four-game sweep of their series with St. Louis, downing the Blues 4-1, while New York Islanders defeated Buffalo Sabres 4-3 to take the series in four games. Los Angeles Kings avoided elimination with a 7-4 victory over Boston. The Bruins hold a 3-1 lead in games.

Games No. 5 in the two remaining series will be played Tuesday in Philadelphia and Los Angeles.

A three-goal Flyer flourish in the final four minutes and 49 seconds of regulation time and a goal at 19:10 of sudden-death overtime by Reggie Leach gave Philadelphia its second consecutive overtime victory on Toronto ice.

Ironically, the Leafs won the opening two games of the series in Philadelphia by 3-2 and 4-1 scores, and also managed a 4-2 win at Philadelphia in the final regular-season meeting of the two clubs.

The Toronto loss Sunday spoiled a record-setting, four-goal performance by Leaf right winger Lanny McDonald.

McDonald's four goals and three assists in a preliminary-round game against Pittsburgh eight days earlier, became the first modern-day Leaf to score three or more goals in one game twice in the same playoff year. But it gave him no solace.

"You never like to set a record when you lose," he said.

McDonald's four goals and another by Borje Salming had Toronto in front 5-2 heading into the final five minutes of the third period.

Then the Leaf defence collapsed. Mel Bridgman at 14:11 and Tom Bladon and Bobby Clarke, with goals 16 seconds apart in the 18th minute, produced a repeat of the Flyers' late-game heroics in game three. In that 4-3 Philadelphia victory, Rick MacLeish scored the tying goal with 38 seconds remaining in regulation time and the winner at 2:55 of overtime.

The Flyers accomplished their comeback without the services of Andre Dupont, Gary Dornhoefer, and Ross Lonsberry, who all received game misconducts from referee Bruce Hood.

Dupont was ejected after a second-period fight with Leaf defenceman Mike Pelyk and Dornhoefer and Lonsberry followed at 12:44 of the third period after making remarks at Hood on their departure from the penalty box.

Leach's winner, his second goal of the night, came off a 50-foot slapshot that zipped through rookie goalie Mike Palmateer's legs.

Palmateer said the shot fooled him after deflecting off Pelyk's stick.

At St. Louis, the Blues held their own for more than two periods. Then disaster struck in the form of an errant pass and the Canadiens went on to win their 16th in 17 post-season games since 1975.

Until Claude Larose missed directed a pass at centre ice, a 1-1 tie existed on Steve Shutt's first-period goal for the Canadiens and Larry Patey's score for the Blues in the second. However, Shutt intercepted the pass and skated in alone to beat Blues netminder Ed Staniowski for the winner.

Peter Mahovlich scored with five minutes remaining and Bob Gainey applied the clincher with an empty-net goal in the closing seconds.

As had been the case in the first three games of the series, the Islanders simply wore down the Sabres and took control in the third period.

In the Islanders' six playoff games this season, all victories, only two players have produced the winning goals. Clark Gillies has four and Bill MacMillan two.

MacMillan fired the winner Sunday after linemate Andre St. Laurent outmuscled Buffalo defenceman Jerry Korab for the puck and flipped it in front. MacMillan powered it past goalie Gerry Desjardins making his first appearance since suffering a severe eye injury Feb. 10.

"We just weren't good enough," said Sabres coach Floyd Smith.

Los Angeles forward Don Kozak scored six seconds after the opening faceoff to set a playoff record and establish the tone for the Kings victory over Boston.

The Kings wrapped up the victory with a three-goal burst late in the final period after the Bruins had reduced the Los Angeles lead to 4-3.

Oilers Bounce Back To Trample Aeros

By The Canadian Press

Edmonton Oilers have literally battled their way back into playoff contention, but player-coach Glen Sather warns against overconfidence.

"We can't act as if this series is over," Sather said after the Oilers had defeated Houston Aeros 7-2 Sunday in the third game of their World Hockey Association West Division semi-final. "We played well but we're still trailing.

"Houston will be tougher in the fourth game Wednesday and we still have to win a game in Houston to win the series."

In Sunday's other playoff game, San Diego Mariners evened the other West Division series at 2-2 with a 6-4 victory over Winnipeg Jets.

On Saturday, Indianapolis eliminated Cincinnati Stingers with a 3-1 victory that gave the Racers a four-game sweep on their East Division series. New England Whalers downed Quebec Nordiques 6-4 in the other East Division series which the Nordiques now lead 3-1.

At Edmonton, veteran Oilers defenceman Barry Wilkins injured his already-damaged right knee in the second period after being roughed up by Terry Ruskowski but he promised to be ready for Wednesday's fourth game.

Gregg Boddy had bumps on his face as a result of his first period fight with Ruskowski and Frank Beaton had a scratch over his eye following a fight with Houston defenceman Al McLeod.

Before Flett left, he earned a pair of assists on goals by linemate Brett Callighen. Bryan Campbell also scored twice for the Oilers with Dave Langevin, Gavin Kirk and Randy Rota getting the others.

Gordie Howe and son Mark accounted for the Houston scoring as the Oilers outshot the visitors 40-27 and took period leads of 3-1 and 5-2.

At San Diego, Norm Ferguson's power-play goal with 1:10 remaining broke a 4-4 tie and gave the Mariners their second victory in as many nights over the Jets. The fifth game will be played Wednesday at Winnipeg.

The game was delayed more than 35 minutes after the third period opened when a goal light, then the clock, then the scoreboard and finally the rink lights all stopped functioning. Before the game, the arena organ also went out.

Seaver Fires One Hitter

By The Associated Press

Tom Seaver has numerous pitching accomplishments to his credit, but one thing keeps eluding him—the no-hitter.

"I'd like to have one, it would be fun to have," said the 32-year-old right-hander, who came close again Sunday—a 6-0, one-hitter against Chicago Cubs.

Seaver has won three Cy Young Awards as the best pitcher in the National League. He has led the league in strikeouts five times, in earned-run average three times and in victories twice. He has carried New York Mets to two pennants and one world championship, earning the nickname "The Franchise" in the process.

Sunday's effort was Seaver's fifth one-hitter, and he claims that at this stage of his career, a no-hitter is no longer a primary objective.

"It would have been more exciting earlier in my career, but values change" he said. "If I get one, I get one. But it's not a measure of greatness."

The one that got away came in the fifth inning when Steve Ontiveros looped a single to right field.

In other National League games Sunday, Los Angeles Dodgers edged San Francisco Giants 7-6, Atlanta Braves beat Houston Astros 5-4, Montreal Expos nipped Philadelphia Phillies 2-1, St. Louis Cardinals trimmed Pittsburgh Pirates 4-3 and Cincinnati Reds defeated San Diego Padres 4-1.

In American League play, Jim Palmer took aim at his third consecutive Cy Young award, tossing a three-hitter to lead Baltimore Orioles to a 5-0 victory over Texas Rangers in the first game of a doubleheader.

Ross Grimsley scattered six hits as the Orioles won the nightcap 6-1.

"I can't expect to pitch much better than I have the last two games," Palmer said after picking up his 44th career shutout.

For Palmer, it was his second consecutive shutout. He has allowed only five hits in his last 18 innings and he has yielded just 14 hits and two runs in 28 innings this year. He boast a 2-1 record and a sparkling 0.64 earned-run average.

Palmer has won three Cy Young awards as the AL's outstanding pitcher—the last two following the 1975 and 1976 seasons.

In other AL games Sunday, Boston and Cleveland split a doubleheader. Boston winning the first game 4-1 and Cleveland taking the second 10-5. Chicago White Sox defeated Toronto Blue Jays 4-2, Minnesota Twins clobbered Oakland A's 10-2, Kansas City Royals nipped Detroit Tigers 6-5, Milwaukee Brewers blanked New York Yankees 2-0 and Seattle Mariners downed California Angels 11-7.

The Mets attack included a two-run homer by Dave Kingman and three runs batted in by Bruce Boisclair, on a single and a double. Chicago's infield also contributed a four-error seventh inning that helped New York to its last three runs.

Rod Gilbreath's double scored Gary Matthews with the winning run in the eighth inning as Atlanta completed a sweep of its series with Houston.

The game was delayed for a few minutes in the fourth inning when the umpires walked off the field after the fans started booing a large-screen scoreboard replay of a close play at home plate on which Houston's Bob Watson scored on a passed ball. After conferring with Atlanta club officials, the umpires returned from the dugout and the game resumed.

Philadelphia's record dropped to 1-6 thanks to Ellis Valentine, who hit his third home run of the season in the eighth inning for the Expos winning run off Gene Garber.

Canadians Win

GRENOBLE, France (Reuter) — Canadian skaters scored a double victory in the world indoor speed skating championships Sunday, winning both the men's and women's 500-metre finals on the 125-metre oval track.

Brenda Webster of Regina took the women's title in a time of 49.54 seconds, ahead of two Winnipeg skaters, Kathy Vogt and Nancy Durnin.

It was Webster's second gold medal of the day. She also took the women's 1,500-metre race, finishing ahead of two United States sisters, Valie and Vicky Retmann.

Gaetan Boucher of Ste. Foy, Que., won the men's event in 46.44 seconds. Craig Kressler of the United States was second, Japan's Hiroshi Toba third.

In the earlier men's 1,500 race, Toba created an upset by taking the gold medal ahead of Kressler and Boucher.

Gray After Title

MEXICO CITY (Reuter) — Pipino Cuevas of Mexico has agreed to defend his World Boxing Association welterweight title against Canadian Clyde Gray in a June 4 bout at Toronto.

Lupe Sanchez, the champion's manager, told reporters that Cuevas will get $90,000 for the 15-round bout. He said the contract would be signed in Toronto on Tuesday.

It will be the third defence for the Mexican who won the title from Angel Espada of Puerto Rico last July.

It will also be the third attempt at the world title for Gray. The Toronto fighter lost one title challenge against former champion Jose Napoles of Mexico and once against Espada.

Calgary Club Grabs Lead

CALGARY (CP) — Robin Laycock scored three goals to lead Calgary Canucks to a 9-4 victory over Richmond Sockeyes in Centennial Cup junior hockey play Sunday night.

Canucks take a 3-1 lead in the best-of-seven quarter-final series.

The fifth game will be played tonight in Calgary.

KELOWNA — Elaine Kanigan of Alberni captured the girls' crown and led her team to a third-place finish in the British Columbia high school badminton championships here at the weekend.

St. George's-Crofton House of Vancouver won the team title for the third consecutive time and Golden finished second.

Bruins Near Sweep Over Hawks

Times News Services

It would appear that New Westminister Bruins are sticking with the same formula that helped them clear the first hurdle in the Western Canada Hockey League playoffs.

The Bruins eliminated Victoria Cougars in four straight in their first-round series and the key game, as New Westminster coach Ernie McLean remembers it, was a 3-2 overtime victory on Victoria ice.

So you can't blame McLean if he places the "key" importance on the Bruins' 3-2 overtime victory in Portland on Saturday.

It sent the Bruins ahead 3-0 in their best-of-seven Coast final with the Winter Hawks and a New Westminster victory tonight would sweep the Bruins into the WCHL championship round.

Stan Smyl, scoring the winner at 5:16 of overtime, John Ogrodnick and Doug Derkson counted Westminster's goals. Dave Hoyda fired both for Portland, the second coming with less than five minutes left in regulation time to force the sudden-death overtime.

Meanwhile, in Brandon, the favored Wheat Kings needed a goal by Ray Allison, coming with only 77 seconds left in regulation time, to defeat Lethbridge Broncos 3-2 in the final.

Second game in the best-of-seven series will be played tonight in Brandon.

Allison scored the winner while flat on his stomach after falling over Lethbridge netminder Rollie Boutin.

Kelly Ferner and Brian Propp gave Wheat Kings a 2-0 lead but Lethbridge came back to tie it on shots by Rod Guimont and Grant Eakin. Eakin's goal came with less than five minutes to play and overtime loomed until Allison directed the puck into the net from the prone position.

It was a tame affair with referee Ian Sandercock of Regina calling only four minors, three to Lethbridge.

Stick-Swinging Finish In Field Hockey Finale

Craig Wilson connected for both the winning and insurance goals Sunday as Rebels I topped India Tigers I 3-1 in the Vancouver Island Men's Field Hockey Association playoff final at Windsor Park.

The teams played to a scoreless deadlock in the first half of a chippy match which ended one minute earlier than regulation time when Tigers walked off the field and refused to continue.

A certain amount of stick-swinging preceded the exodus but the match will stand.

"I ruled the game was completed," umpire Alistair Glegg said today.

Danny Tourangeau opened scoring for Rebels on a penalty stroke about 13 minutes into the second half and Subash Sharma tied it up for Tigers a couple of minutes later.

Wilson fired his first goal moments after and scored again on a goal-post rebound just a few munutes from the end of play.

The match was the final one of the season but VIMFA representative squads will see action during the next few months.

A side will be competing in the California Cup tournament in California during May and a squad will face the Dutch national team here in July.

Lietzke Thrilled To Lose a Playoff

CARLSBAD, Calif. (AP) — Jack Nicklaus shrugged off the golfing milestone he passed Sunday, preferring to talk about Bruce Lietzke, the 25-year-old golfer he had just defeated in a sudden-death playoff to capture the prestigious $225,000 Tournament of Champions title.

"I look to Bruce to be one of two or three guys in the future to dominate the game," Nicklaus said after beating Lietzke in a three-hole playoff.

"He's long, he's strong, he plays very well, he thinks well," Nicklaus said in assessing Lietzke, one of the leaders in the youth movement that has swept the pro tour this year.

"He will win a lot of golf tournaments. He has all the equipment."

He also idolizes Nicklaus.

"He's been my idol since I was eight or 10 years old," Lietzke said. "I got in a lot of fist fights defending him when I was a kid. You know, he was a young player then and coming along and beating Arnold Palmer and a lot of people didn't like it.

"Then, when he got on top and stayed on top, I felt good because he'd always been my man. And now to play with him, well, I just feel like I've grown up with him."

And there was no disappointment involved when Nicklaus rolled in a birdie put of about eight feet on the third extra hole to beat Lietzke in the chase for the $45,000 first prize.

Junior Upsets Milliken In Second-Round Action

By ERNIE FEDORUK
Times Staff

A pair of Uplands Golf Club representatives had their own methods of surviving on the course Sunday.

While the methods varied, 18-year-old Russ Reynolds and professional Don Bilsborough headed in the same direction — into the quarter-finals of the 28th annual Vancouver Island Open tournament.

Reynolds survided a 90-yard "popup" off the 12th tee and held on to defeat 1975 champion Grant Milliken of Gorge Vale in the major upset of the second round, played Sunday at Royal Colwood.

Billsborough squandered a four-hole advantage but recovered with a fine shot from a sand trap on the 16th hole and proceeded to sideline former tour pro John Morgan.

Joining Billsborough and Reynolds in next Sunday's quarter-finals at Glen Meadows were medallist Carl Schwantje, four-time champion Bill Wakeham, Dave Anderson, Jim Rutledge, Dave Donaldson and Jeff Jones.

The eight who enjoyed success in the handicap division were Urban Allen, Peter McKenzie, Andy Baraniuk, Bruce Pelmore, Paul Harris, Bill Shvetz, Norm Haskell and Al Senior.

One up standing on the tee of the difficult, par-four 12th, Reynolds seemed headed for trouble when he miss-hit his tee shot. It went only 90 yards.

Reynolds hit a good second shot, however, and then completed his recovery with a wedge shot and two putts for a bogey five.

Milliken, on the other hand, hit a good drive. The former champ failed to reach the green with his second shot. Like Reynolds, he had to finish up with a wedge and two putts.

The half, Reynolds agreed, was his salvation. The pair parred the remaining holes and the Uplands junior emerged with his one up victory.

Billsborough, who was approximately one under par on a course toughened considerably by extremely slow greens and the use of championship tees, went four up on Morgan in the first seven holes.

The 29-year-old Morgan, also playing out of Uplands, managed to pull even by the 14th.

On 15, Morgan expected to move ahead when he hit the green on the par-three hole while Billsborough's tee shot wound up in a sand trap. Billsborough, however, came out of the sand and sank a tough, eight-foot putt for a par.

Morgan, on the other hand, three-putted and they moved to 16 with Billsborough back in the lead.

"That was the turning point," Morgan said of the 15th.

They halved 16 and 17 in pars and Morgan conceded Billsborough a birdie putt on 18 to make it a two-up victory for Don.

Schwantje came up with four birdies and three bogies in defeating Uplands' Gord Rands 6 and 5. Schwantje started his round by missing two 18-inch putts on the first three holes, one for a par and the other for a birdie.

Rands, however, failed to take advantage of Schwantje's over-par holes.

Wakeham figured in the only other comfortable victory. He played par golf to defeat Steve Hambleton of Colwood 7 and 5.

Only one match went into extra holes. Dave Anderson, an intermediate from Victoria Club, had to go two extra holes to defeat Uplands' Mike Gray, a result that also might be considered a mild upset.

Dave Donaldson of Gorge Vale defeated 15-year-old Lanny Sawchuck of Uplands 2 and 1; Jim Rutledge, the two-time city junior champ, adjusted better to the putting conditions to eliminate Namaimo's Sandy Harper two up, and Jeff Jones of Colwood beat Glen Meadows' Keith Swetnam one up.

White's Late Basket Pulls Celtics Through

By The Associated Press

Boston's Jo Jo White started out like he was going to have to buy a ticket to get into the next game. He had four first-half points and picked up his fifth personal foul 6:03 before halftime.

But before White was through, his Boston Celtic teammates were pounding him on the back.

White scored 17 points in the second half, including the final two of the game, as Boston rallied for a 113-111 win Sunday over Philadelphia '76ers and a 1-0 lead in their National Basketball Association best-of-seven Eastern Conference semi-final playoff series. The second game is Wednesday at Philadelphia.

In other games Sunday, the NBA's best-of-three preliminary rounds were decided. Washington Bullets defeated Cleveland Cavaliers 104-98 to enter the East semi-finals Golden State Warriors advanced to a Western Conference semi-final with a 109-101 win over Detroit Pistons and Portland Trail Blazers also moved into a West semifinal, beating Chicago Bulls 106-98.

The Bullets open their series Thursday against the Rockets at Houston and Portland faces the Nuggets at Denver while Golden State meets the Lakers at Los Angeles on Wednesday.

Philadelphia's Julius Erving had tied the score 111-111 on a driving dunk shot with eight seconds remaining. But Erving, one of the great clutch players in the history of basketball, missed both ends of a two chances-to-make-one free throw opportunity.

With six seconds left, White took the inbound pass and shot. The ball rebounded to Boston's Sidney Wicks, whose shot was rebuffed by Erving.

The ball bounced to White along the baseline. He shot again, and with the ball in the air, time ran out. His 21-foot jumper went in, capping a Boston rally that began from 13 points back in the first half and 10 behind in the second.

Doug Collins collected 27 points for Philadelphia. White wound up with 21, as did Dave Cowens. Wicks tallied 23 and John Havlicek 19 for the Celtics.

PLAYERS, FANS BRAWL IN PRO HOOP PLAYOFF

OAKLAND (AP) — A fight betwees Golden State Warriors' Charles Dudley and Detroit Pistons' Eric Money broke out in the third quarter of their National Basketball Association playoff game Sunday, setting off a brawl involving fans and players.

The fight started under the Piston's basket, and, after several other players had joined in, the fight moved toward the stands.

One fan leaned over the press table and struck the Pistons' M. L. Carr. At that point, Detroit assistant coach Larry Jones and several Pistons players jumped over the press table and into the stands to assist Detroit players who were being pummelled by fans.

Two referees filling in for striking regular NBA officials — Milt Cooper and Bernie Fryer — were working the game, which had been physical throughout. Several controversial calls had preceded the fight.

The game resumed after about a 10-minute delay. No players were ejected.

Kings Lose On Coin Flip

NEW YORK (AP) — Milwaukee Bucks have earned the right to pick first in the National Basketball Association's June 10 college draft when they won a coin flip with Kansas City Kings at league headquarters.

The coin flip has been held each year since 1966 between the teams with the worst records in each conference. Milwaukee had the poorest mark in the Western Conference last season while Kansas City was participating because it had obtained the New York Nets' first draft choice in the Nate Archibald trade.

Palmer Survives Blalock Charge

HILTON HEAD ISLAND, S.C. (AP) — Sandra Palmer, after watching a five-stroke lead dissolve on the back nine, sank a birdie on the 16th to win the women's international golf tournament by two strokes over Jane Blalock on Sunday.

The $12,000 victory put the Fort Worth, Tex., veteran ahead of Kathy Whitworth as the leading money winner on the Ladies Professional Golfers Association tour this year, boosting her earnings to almost $49,000.

Blalock made an amazing charge that brought her from seven strokes behind to one stroke ahead of Palmer at one point. But her drive on the par-four 18th skidded into the marsh on the left of the fairway. The second shot hardly budged the ball and it took four more strokes to finish with a double bogey.

Palmer, winner in March of the Kathryn Crosby at San Diego, finished with a two-under 70 for a 72-hole total of 271, seven-under par.

Starting out tied with Mary Lou Crocker with a 54-hole total of 221, Palmer had four birdies and five pars on the front side to make the turn five strokes in front of the pack. But she bogeyed 10, 13 and 15 before the victory-saving birdie on the par-four 16th.

Blalock, of Highland Beach, Fla., picked up $8,000 for her second place finish, bringing her total in four tournaments this year to $29,000.

Tied for third with totals of 284 were Silvia Bertolaccini, who finished with 71, and Pat Bradley, at 70.

Crocker, leader of the tournament for the first two rounds, tied for fourth with Jan Stephenson with a total of 285, three-under par.

Sandra Post finished with a 71 for a 72-hole total of 293. Marlene Streit of Stouffville, Ont., had a closing 77 for a 302 total.

Czechs Drub Team Canada

PRAGUE (CP) — The host Czechoslovakian national team gained some revenge for its Canada Cup loss last year by beating Team Canada 7-2 in the first of two exhibition hockey games Saturday.

The Czechs were beaten in two games of the Canada Cup tournament final by a Canadian squad of National Hockey League players. Saturday, it was much the same Czech team facing a weaker Canadian squad of NHL and World Hockey Association players.

Marian Stastny beat goalie Tony Esposito for two first-period goals to lead the Czechs who led 3-1 after the first period. Eric Vail got the lone Canadian goal in the first period and, after a scoreless second period, Pierre Larouche narrowed the margin with the second Team Canada goal.

But the Czechs continued to dominate, scoring four more goals before a crowd of more than 16,000 fans.

Jaroslav Pouzar, Jiri Novak, Bohuslav Ebermann, Milan Chalupa and Jiri Bubla accounted for the other Czech goals while Vladimir Dzurilla provided steady goaltending for the host club.

The second Canada-Czech exhibition match is scheduled for tonight before both clubs head for Vienna and the world championships starting Thursday.

Telecasts Halted

NEW YORK (AP) — National telecasts of the United States boxing championships have been suspended pending the outcome of an investigation, the American Broadcasting Corporation announced Saturday.

The suspension took effect immediately and ruled out the telecast of Saturday's semi-final matches in Miami. However, those fights were to be held.

"Since the early stages of the tournament, ABC has been investigating various allegations and improprieties and has subsequently turned over to the U.S. attorney for Maryland evidence that it has uncovered such improprieties," ABC said in a statement.

There have been charges of purse kickbacks, inaccurate records and false rankings and a federal grand jury in Maryland is holding hearings in connection with tournament.

The basis for the tournament, promoted by Don King, has been the U.S. rankings of The Ring magazine.

Tackle Traded

PHILADELPHIA (UPI) — Philadelphia Eagles have traded veteran defensive-tackle Bill Dunstan to Buffalo Bills for an undisclosed future draft choice.

Dunstan, 28, joined the Eagles as a free agent in 1973 after spending previous taxi squad time with San Francisco and the New York Jets. He was the 49ers' 14th round draft choice in 1971.

Hurrykings Trailing

CALGARY (CP) — Calgary Trojans took the lead in their best-of-five Western Canada intermediate hockey championship series by defeating North Vancouver Hurrykings twice during the weekend.

They defeated Vancouver 6-4 Sunday and 3-2 Saturday night after losing the opening game 5-3 Friday.

The fourth game is tonight and the fifth, if necessary, Tuesday.

Trojans came from behind in both games, and Brian Miller scored the winner each time.

He connected Saturday three minutes from the end of a 20-minute overtime session, after forcing overtime with 80 seconds remaining in regulation time.

His Sunday goal came midway through the third period and gave Calgary a 5-3 lead.

Yarborough Runs Away

BRISTOL, Tenn. (AP) — Cale Yarborough led all but two laps Sunday as he made a runaway of the final 500-lap Grand National stock car race at Bristol International Speedway with an easy victory in the Southeastern 500.

The veteran Chevrolet driver went in front for good on the 97th lap and never was headed as he won his third consecutive race at the local .533-mile track and picked up his fourth triumph on the Grand National circuit this season.

Yarborough started on the pole and stayed in front to the 95th lap when he yielded the lead for one lap each to Darrel Waltrip and Benny Parsons. He then went ahead again for the last time and gradually pulled away.

His average speed on the high-banked oval was 100.989 miles an hour, narrowly missing the track record of 101.074 m.p.h.

Yarborough, who did set a record for the Southeastern 500, finished seven laps in front of Ford driver Dick Brooks. Dodge driver Richard Petty was third, two laps behind Brooks.

Neil Bonnett was fourth in a Dodge and Benny Parsons was fifth in a Chevrolet.

Elsewhere in the world of motor sport, West German Jochen Mass won both 20-lap heats of the Jim Clark Memorial auto race at Hockenheimring, West Germany.

France's Rene Arnoux placed second in the Formula 2 race to tighten his hold on the lead in the championship standings.

Athletics, Wests Gain Final

Victoria West and Victoria Athletics, the teams that brought the Canadian senior club soccer championship to Vancouver Island the past two years, are back on the Province Cup and national title trails.

They qualified for provincial playoffs by advancing to the Vancouver Island Soccer League's Jackson Cup final at the weekend.

Wests, the defending national and Jackson Cup champions, made it with a comparatively-easy 5-0 victory over Nanaimo City at Royal Athletic Park on Saturday.

Athletics, who won the Canadian club title in 1975 as London Boxing Club, also took the shutout route Sunday by defeating Powell River Villas 2-0 at Blanshard Street Park.

They'll meet in the Jackson Cup final next Saturday at Royal Athletic Park, starting at 2:15 p.m.

Winners of next Saturday's game will face Italia Canadians of the B.C. Mainland League while the losers will go against Vernon, the Okanagan champs. The Province Cup playoffs are scheduled during the April 30-May 1 weekend.

Wests and Athletics could conceivably meet in the Island League's premier division final. Athletics have already reached the league final and are scheduled to meet either Wests or Nanaimo City.

The Nanaimo - West semi-final is scheduled to be played Wednesday at Royal Athletic Park, starting at 7:30 p.m.

Despite dominating most of the action Sunday, Athletics had some problems with a determined Powell River defence and gave themselves a few headaches with erratic shooting.

John Nash had an excellent scoring chance for Victoria at 16 minutes and grazed a post. Seven minutes later, clubmate Charlie Fisher missed a drive at an open net.

When Athletics did get the ball into the net before the intermission it was ruled "no goal" because of hands.

Villas started the second half with a rush and promptly took their turn at missing opportunities.

Jim Venhoff intercepted a back pass at one minute and rapped a shot off the crossbar. Drew Ferguson was barely wide on a 25-yard blast two minutes later.

Victoria quickly regained the initiative and moved ahead at 12 minutes, when Nash stole the ball from Powell River's George Orchison and scored from about 10 yards out.

Athletics got their clinching tally in the closing minutes. Mike Allabarton did the honors, connecting from about 10 yards after being sent into the clear on a neat pass by George Pakos.

The Wests also encountered early difficulty with Nanaimo in Saturday's semi-final.

Rob William's opened scoring for Wests at 29 minutes and Nanaimo's prospects were set back when Steve Forslund scored goals at 35 and 39 minutes.

Forslund and Williams also teamed up to provide Wests with second-half goals at 51 minutes and 64 minutes. Williams scored both and excellent plays set up Forslund.

A 'BEST' FOR PHILIP

LONDON, England — Philip Delesalle of Victoria continues to add to his stature as an international gymnast.

The 18-year-old Canadian collected his first international gold medal when he won the pommel horse event at a meet in Riga, Latvia, earlier this month.

Saturday he won the bronze medal in the London Cup meet to record his best-ever over-all finish in major international competition.

Russia's Serfeig Khizhaniskov, rallying with a superb performance on the parallel bars, edged Kazue Horide of Japan to win the over-all gold medal.

Teodora Ungureanu, 16, of Romania captured the women's crown.

Olympic champion Nadia Comaneci, also of Romania, actually recorded the highest women's score, but she was competing as a guest performer and was not eligible for the title.

Shavers Shows Punching Power

LAS VEGAS (AP) — Heavyweight contender Ernie Shavers, 209, may have punched himself into a title shot with Muhammad Ali when he used a vicious display of power Saturday in knocking out California heavyweight champion Howard Smith, 202, in the second round of their scheduled 10-round bout.

Shavers, 31, ran his record to 55-5-1 with the 52nd knockout of his career.

Smith, 30, never had a chance. Shavers, from Warren, Ohio, caught Smith with a hard right cross in the middle of the first round, then picked his shots from then on out.

In preliminary bouts, Olympic gold medalist Mike Spinks, 168, made his professional debut with a first-round knockout of Philadelphian Eddie Benson, also 168.

Steve's Friend Derby Surprise

Times News Services

Three-year-olds racing in California, who have yet to produce an outstanding colt, came up with a $70.80 surprise Sunday when Steve's Friend captured the $227,500 Hollywood Derby at Hollywood Park.

Jockey Rubin Herandez brought the longshot Steve's Friend in by three-quarters of a length over the third betting choice, Affiliate, and the solid favorite, Habitony.

Sonny Collins was fourth in a field of 10.

Thus, the California Golden Triple was divided three ways this spring. Cuzwuzwrong won the California Derby in the first leg of the triple at Golden Gate Fields on March 5 and Habitony was an easy winner in the Santa Anita Derby on March 27.

The time for the 1⅛ miles was 1:47 4-5, which bettered the Derby record set last year at 1:48 2-5 by Crystal Water.

At Golden Gate Fields, Saturday, jockey Marco Castaneda thought he was going to be eased out of the money during Saturday's $116,000 Golden Gate Handicap but his mount, Elmendorf Farms' Annoncer, put it together at the three-eighths pole.

"I had nowhere to run until about the three-eighth pole when a horse drifted out," he said in the winners' circle after picking up $71,000 of the purse.

"Then I kept him to the outside and he closed strongly."

Castaneda got the best of the breaks as the charge of 14 thoroughbreds fanned out coming out of the final turn, and he overhauled the pacesetting Branford Court to post a one-length victory over The Fop and Sir Jason.

Announcer ran the mile and one sixteenth on the turf in 1:40 2-5, a full second under the old mark, and paid $8.80, $4.40 and $3.80.

In other major races Saturday in the United States, Iron Derby won the $27,500 Hirsch Jacobs Stakes at Pimleco, Turn And Count won the $80,000 Excelsior Handicap at Aqueduct, Honest Pleasure won the $28,650 Ben Ali Handicap at Keeneland and Copano won Hialeah's $66,000 Black Helen Handicap.

At Baltimore, Iron Derby defeated Jeff's Try by a neck to win the $27,000 Hirsch Jacobs Stakes while favored Royal Ski, owned by Boston Bruins' goalkeeper Gerry Cheevers, finished fourth. Iron Derby paid $11.20.

At New York, Turn and Count, the 2-5 favorite, ridden by Steve Cauthen, the leading jockey in the United States, came from far back to win the Excelsior Handicap.

Part of a three-horse entry, Turn and Count paid $2.80 to win. It was Turn and Count's third win in eight starts. He has five seconds.

Lismont Scores Marathon Victory

OTSU, Japan (Reuter) — Olympic medallist Karel Lismont of Belgium won the 32nd Mainichi Marathon in two hours, 14 minutes, eight seconds Sunday.

Lismont, 28, won the silver in the 1972 Olympic marathon and was third at the 1976 Montreal Olympics.

Practice Pays For Whitecaps

Times New Services

Vancouver Whitecaps evened their North American Soccer League record at one win and one loss Sunday with a 2-0 victory over San Jose Earthquakes before a crowd of 7,494 at Vancouver's Empire Stadium.

Whitecaps had lost their season opener 1-0, to Portland Timbers.

Both Vancouver goals, the first by assistant coach Holger Osieck, playing his first game, and the second by Glen Johnson came as a result of set plays.

The first goal, at 18 minutes, climaxed continuous pressure on the San Jose goal.

San Jose fullback Laurie Callaway cleared one Johnson drive off the goal line at the nine-minute mark. Then, minutes later, Callaway again took a goal away from Johnson with another clearing move after goalie Mike Hewitt had allowed a drive from Brian Budd to bounce off his chest.

On the corner kick, Johnson put the ball almost on the near goal post, as practice drills under coach Eckhard Krautzun dictated should be done. Budd leaped high in the air and headed the ball into the danger zone in front of the net and Osieck headed the ball into the net, just as the book said.

The second Vancouver goal came about two minutes into the second half when a San Jose foul gave the Whitecaps a free kick directly in front of the net from 22 yards out.

With the San Jose defence lined up in the normal "wall position," Bob Bolitho ran over the ball, Budd and Buzz Parsons moved quickly out of their spots in the wall, and Johnson fired a blistering shot through the hole and into the net.

In other NASL games Sunday Fort Lauderdale defeated Toronto 4-3, Washington blanked Connecticut 3-0, New York blanked Rochester 2-0, and Los Angeles trimmed Team Hawaii 6-0.

On Saturday, Dallas took the measure of St. Louis 3-0, Tampa Bay drubbed Chicago 4-0 and Minnesota edged Seattle 1-0.

BELLINGHAM RIDER SCORES

LE CASTELLET, France (AP) — Canadian champion Steve Baker of Bellingham, Wash., riding a Yamaha, clinched the World Cup of motorcycle racing Sunday by winning the 200-mile Le Castellet race, beating American Kenny Roberts, also on a Yamaha.

The 24-year-old Baker beat Roberts by more than 30 seconds before 120,000 cheering fans at Le Castellet. Baker took the lead at the fourth lap and Roberts never caught up.

Bays Against Bays In Two Rugby Finals

It will be a battle of the Bays in both of the Vancouver Island Rugby Union finals.

Favored James Bay and Oak Bay advanced to the first division's Barnard Cup final while their second-division counterparts will play off for the Times Cup next weekend at Macdonald Park.

First-place finishers during the regular season, James Bay reached the first division final Saturday by defeating University of Victoria Vikings 23-8 at Macdonald Park.

Less expected was Oak Bay Wanderers' march into the Barnard Cup showdown. Wanderers upset Cowichan on the strength of a kickoff situation Sunday.

Tied 3-3 at the end of regulation time in Duncan, Oak Bay and Cowichan failed to break the deadlock in a 20-minute overtime and then resorted to a sudden-death kicking duel.

Pat Trelawny emerged as Oak Bay's hero when he booted Wanderers' winning points after John Garvie had missed Cowichan's attempt.

Trelawny also scored Oak Bay's points during regulation time, counting on a penalty with about 15 minutes left in regulation time. Howard Dixon had staked Cowichan to a 3-0 lead, also on a penalty goal.

James Bay racing off to a 15-4 lead at the half, made a more positive advance into the final.

Doug Archibald, Mike Blades and Chuck Shergold scored tries for James Bay while Barry Robbins added two penalty goals, Stu Barber one penalty goal and Paul Mulholm a conversion.

Tries by Allistair Palmer and Gary Grant accounted for Vikings' points.

Oak Bay's second team defeated Nanaimo 15-9 at Windsor Park to move into the Times Cup finale against JBAA, which had defeated Royal Roads in a semi-final played the previous weekend.

Ken Foote, Dave Valentine and Jamie McIntyre scored tries for Oak Bay, Gary Hoskins added a penalty goal.

Penalty goals accounted for Nanaimo's total with Pat Dubin booting two and Dan Fulla one.

In exhibition matches at the weekend, Cowichan juniors defeated Spoone, a touring schoolboy team from the Nroth of England, 14-3, Saturday.

Cowichan's first and second teams also scored shutout victories against teams from the New Zealand ship Otago. Cowichan firsts triumphed 12-0 while the seconds scored a more convincing 37-0 victory.

At Vancouver, the British Columbia junior side scored a 20-3 triumph over Cheshire, a touring schoolboy side from Britain.

CHIEFS' OWNER PLANS A SHIFT TO SPOKANE

KAMLOOPS (CP) — The Kamloops Chiefs Western Canada Hockey League franchise will probably be shifted this summer to Spokane, Wash., team owner Ephram Steinke said Saturday.

Steinke, the team's majority owner, said almost a half million dollars in losses over the past four years, and the city's refusal to construct a new arena, dictate the move.

He said he's considering either Spokane or Seattle, but he's reported to have told players on the team earlier this week that the franchise would be moved to Spokane.

The Chiefs finished second this season in the Western Division of the WCHL.

Manager-coach Harvey Roy is not expected to accompany the team to the U.S. but will probably manage the Kamloops Braves of the B.C. Junior Hockey League.

Hornets Charge Past Vampires

Saanich Hornets defeated Saanich Vampires 19-12 Sunday at Cedar Hill Park to post their second straight victory in the Vancouver Island Junior Bantam Football League.

Cowichan Patriots won their first by defeating Juan de Fuca Tigers 24-12 in Sunday's other game.

Brian Kennish scored two touchdowns and a convert while Chris Spargo added another major to spark Hornets.

Keith Smith, on a 60-yard run, and Alan Russell counted Vampires' majors.

Second-half touchdowns by Parlad Dhut and Steve Southerland broke a 12-12 tie and powered Cowichan to victory. Rick McLaughlin and Falko Heuser chalked up Patriots' other majors. Mike Boderson and Steve Smith went over for Tigers' six-pointers.

JILL PELLAND

Jill Pelland Grabs Spotlight In Trials for Track Team

It's been a few years, but Jill Pelland is back in the Vancouver Island track and field picture.

And, as pictures go, she's looking good.

Pelland's return to competition overshadowed all else Sunday as the Island's top athletes turned out at Centennial Stadium to win berths on the Select team that will represent Victoria in the newly-organized Western Canada Track League.

One of the province's top hurdlers, Jill held the B.C. women's record for the 100 yards (14.4 seconds) and the Canadian 200 mark when she seemingly ended her track career because of a back injury in 1970.

Unannounced, seven years later, she came out of nowhere in Sunday's trial to upset Victoria Track Club team-mate Wendy Davies, winning the 100-metre hurdles and, apparently, a berth on the Selects.

Pelland did it convincingly. Her time of 15.2 seconds, recorded in an annoying wind, was six-tenths of a second better than Davies.

Jill's return took the spotlight away from teamate Al Sheridan, a winner of three events, and Esquimalt's Gail Gummer, and Lindsay Jack of VTC, both double winners.

Sheridan was unopposed in the 110 men's hurdles but earned full marks for victories in the 100-metre dash and the 200. He beat VTC teammate Brian Hawkesworth in the 100 with a time of 11.8 and defeated Gavan Smart of Esquimalt in the 200 with a 23.3 clocking.

Gummer also won two sprints, the 100 in 13.0 and the 200 in 25.9. Sheryl Blevins of Mercuries was runnerup in each race. Jack won the women's long jump and shot put.

Tom Griffin of Mercuries passed up his best events (the 800 and 1500) and proved no sluch in the 400. He won that race in 50.3 seconds, beating Smart. Mercuries' Steve Martin won the 800 and Esquimalt's Tony Therriault won the metric mile.

Other event-winners Sunday were Brian Blaney of Mercuries (3000 steeplechase), John Lamberth of the Flying Y (masters mile), Debbie Campbell of Mercuries (400), Ulla Hansen of Mercuries (800), Debbie Scott of Esquimalt (1500), Judy Tobacco of the Y (high jump), Liz Hollands of Duncan (discus), Tracy Wilkinson of Claremont (javelin), Murray Keating of Esquimalt (hammer), Harold Willers of VTC (discus), Harold Hamilton of Duncan (shot put), Mark Nyhoff of VTC (high jump and Brent Fougner of VTC (triple jump).

Fougner's efforts of 14.34 metres equalled his best-ever outdoor performance.

Teams in the Western League are allowed to enter two competitors in each event and the makeup of Victoria's team will be announced later. The league opens May 14 in Victoria.

Griffin, Campbell and Fougnerscored victories Saturday in a one-day Simon Fraser University invitational meet at Swangard Stadium.

Griffin won the 800 metres in 1:52.6, Campbell took the women's 400 in 58.2 while Fougner won the triple jump with an effort of 13.98 metres.

Three other Island athletes managed seconds. Hansen was runner-up to Campbell in the women's 400, Martin finished second in the men's 1500 in 4:05.2 and John Phillips of VTC Track Club was runner-up in the high jump with a leap of 1.88 metres.

SFU's Debbie Brill, winning the high jump with a leap of six feet, and teammate Harold Heer taking the pole vault with a jump of 15 feet, six inches, were named the outstanding performers.

SFU won team honors, followed by Seattle Pacific University and Vancouver Olympics.

McCormick Wins Tennis Tourney

YAKIMA (CP) — Don McCormick of Vancouver defeated Jim Deroath of Spokane, 6-4, 6-2 Sunday to win the Central Washington open tennis tournament.

McCormick, who won $400, defeated Al Stoultz of Seattle 7-6, 6-2 in the semi-finals, also played Sunday.

CHRIS COLLECTS ANOTHER CROWN

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Chris Evert of the United States took a nine-point tiebreaker in the second set for a 6-3, 7-6 victory over Martina Navratilova of Czechoslovakia in Sunday's World Series of Women's tennis championship final.

The top-seeded Evert received $50,000 for her third consecutive title in the tournament, and Navrotilova $25,000 for second place.

Sunday's consolation match was forfeited to Britain's Virginia Wade by compatriot Sue Barker, who is suffering from a shoulder injury.

Evert's victory in the tiebreaker nullified Navratilova's spunky rally. She came back from match point with a 5-3 score in the second set.

Evert made 35 unforced errors to Navratilova's 54 during the match, lengthened by frequent deuce-point battles.

Getting Better, Says Billie Jean

PORT WASHINGTON, N.Y. (AP) — Top-seeded Billie Jean King methodically destroyed Caroline Stoll Sunday to win the singles championship of a $20,000 women's pro tennis tournament here and then teamed with Dr. Renee Richards to capture the doubles final.

"I'm getting better," said King, attempting a comeback after a knee surgery. She won all five of her singles matches in the week-long tourney here without the loss of a set.

She defeated 16-year-old Stoll 6-1, 6-1, winning the last five games of the match.

Then she joined Richards, the transsexual opthamologist, in beating Americans Jane Stratton and Pat Bostrom, 6-3, 6-0.

It was Richards' first doubles victory on the women's tennis tour.

Stoll had upset Richards in the semi-finals Saturday.

Marketable Canadian

TORONTO (CP) — Nicky Furlano, Canadian junior lightweight boxing champion, with just five pro fights under his belt, is a marketable commodity in the eyes of his manager-trainer, almost along the lines of U.S. Olympic gold medallist Sugar Ray Leonard.

Leonard, the Olympic welterweight king, signed a three-year contract with ABC-TV for $40,000 a year. Furlanp's people are aiming for a similar TV contact calling for about half that figure.

Champion Leads Motocross Event

SITTENDORF, Austria (Reuter) — Defending champion Roger de Coster of Belgium won the first race in the 1977 500cc world motocross motorcycles championships Sunday.

De Coster, five times world motocross champion, gained 15 points in winning the first of two races.

For Laurel Wreath, and a Bowl of Stew

BOSTON, (AP)— In 1775, as the story goes, 300 British troops ran 26 miles from Concord and Lexington back to the safety of their Boston garrison after being routed by colonials on Lexington Green.

The anniversary of that retreat is a state holiday in Massachusetts called Patriot's day. Even some residents of Massachusetts don't know the story of Patriot's Day but from all over the world people come to celebrate it.

They come here to run in the Boston marathon.

Today is the 81st running of the Boston Athletic Association's painful foot race over 26 miles, 385 yards of asphalt and pavement.

And because Patriot's Day comes at New England's sharpest turn of winter to spring, there's no telling if the day will bring snow or desert heat. The temperature last year hit 100.

To run at Boston the entry fee is $3. To qualify, a runner must finish any of 150 lesser marathons in under three hours. If you are female, or male and over 40 you get a 30-minute handicap in your qualifying race.

And today at noon, there are expected to be 3,100 starters when the pistol goes off and the cheers go up in downtown Hopkinton, a suburb of Boston.

Less than three hours later, the first of the runners will cross the finish line on Ring Road in Boston's fashionable Back Bay.

Sooner or later — maybe after the sun goes down — 90 per cent of the starters will push themselves to the finish. Many, though, will collapse in pain. Others will dehydrate and retch. No one has ever died in this race.

But what does the winner receive for all this?

A laurel wreath and a bowl of beef stew.

Officials say they expect runners from 23 nations, including 90-pound Mike Gorman, a 41-year-old California housewife, and Johnny A. Kelley, 69, of Dennis, Mass., making his 46th run.

Among Canadians expected to take part are Jerome Drayton of Toronto, who placed sixth in the marathon at the Montreal Olympics, and Wayne Yetman, also of Toronto, who won the Canadian marathon trial last year and then finished a disappointing 36th in Montreal.

The Boston Marathon record is held by Bill Rodgers, a school teacher from Everett Mass. Rodgers, who plans to run on Monday, set the mark in 1976 when he finished the course in two hours, nine minutes, 55 seconds.

. . . FOR TARAHUMARAS, A 26-MILE DASH

BOSTON (AP) — For the 3,100 runners entered in today's Boston Marathon, it may be just as well that Mexico's Tarahumara Indians have still to hear of the 26-mile dash.

The little-known Tarahumaras, a primitive group of mountain dwellers who eat mostly corn and beans, and who have short legs and go barefoot, run their miles by the hundreds.

"They never stop running. They don't walk. They are always running, and they can do it for days," says Alexander Leaf, chief of medical services at Massachusetts General hospital.

Two years ago, Dr. Leaf trekked into the Sierra Madre mountains to learn first-hand of the running people whose name translates to "fleet-footed."

These people can run down a deer," he said in an interview Sunday.

"They have their own races where they have teams of three. They kick a wooden ball the size of a large orange as they run. They go all night. The race is 200 miles and everyone gambles on it. They bet their crops"

Wanting to study their hearts and pulses, Dr. Leaf hauled a bicycle machine into the hills. But he says he couldn't teach the Tarahumaras, who still plow their fields with a stick, how to pedal it. He says he tried taping their feet to the machine, and it scared them away.

Dr. Leaf said mystery of the running people is unexplained, except for folklore which relates their running habits to their marriage customs.

"They marry from other villages, and when they do, the man gets a plot of land in his village and the woman gets a plot in her village. The couple spends their time running back and forth. That's the only explanation I have heard."

Dr. Leaf said there are 40,000 to 50,000 Tarahumaras in central and northern Mexico. He said they are mostly vegetarians, and, aside from their always being on the go — usually doing a six-minute mile — there is nothing odd about their lives.

NEWEST LION IS QUICK

VANCOUVER (CP) — Vic Rapp, coach of the British Columbia Lions, is all sunshine in the wake of his signing 20-year-old Florida running back Leon Bright.

Bright has decided to forsake examinations at Florida State University to sign on with the Canadian Football League Lions and Rapp said the Lions are "really high on him."

"I just got back from there (Florida)," Rapp said, "and I timed him at 4.1 in the 40."

The 5'9", 180-pound Bright was inactive this year while he attempted to boost sagging marks.

"He was probably the highest-pursued Florida player in years when he came out of high school," said Bob Bowden, Florida State head coach, in a telephone interview.

Captain's Party Starts with Win

VANCOUVER (CP) — Captain's Party, one of the most consistent horses ever to race at Exhibition Park, opened his 1977 campaign Saturday by winning the $10,000-added Lansdowne Handicap.

The five-year-old Kentucky-bred horse went to the post as the 2-to-1 favorite in the field of nine with the United States invader Sweet Shooter second choice.

Jockey Andy Smith moved Captain's Party from slightly off the pace at the quarter pole, had the lead by a head entering the stretch, and was in front by half a length at the wire.

McLennan Pulls Away To Bike Win

Dave McLennan turned in a powerful ride at the Oldfield Road circuit Sunday and pulled away to a victory in a 60-kilometre bicycle race staged by Victoria Wheelers.

Competing in windy conditions, McLennan and Sean Clazie broke away from the pack during the first of the fourlaps. Clazie dropped back in the final lap and McLennan was all alone at the finish, completing the course in one hour, 46 minutes, 57 seconds.

Clazie was second in 1:48:15, followed by Philip Quillevere (1:53:06), Michel Peron (1:53:16) and Brian Travelbea (1:55:25).

It was a tighter finish in the 30-kilometre novice race, which Ashley Walker won by a margin of several yards. Tony Wakelin nipped Phil Langrish for second place with Brian Bates taking fourth place. Susan Blechschmidt, the only girl in the event, finished about five minutes behind the leader.

Indy Date Switch?

INDIANAPOLIS (UPI) — Citing unruly crowds and destruction of property, the speedway town board asked officials of the Indianapolis 500 to hold the annual auto classic on Saturday.

The late May event has been run on Sunday each of the last three years. This year's race — the 61st — will be Sunday, May 29.

The request to change the race to Saturdays in the future was made in a letter to Indianapolis Motor Speedway president Tony Hulman.

A published report Friday said officials agreed to hold the 1978 race on Saturday, but the track owners would not confirm any change.

The speedway board, which expected opposition to its proposals from hotel owners and merchants, said its reason for seeking the change was to control unruly race fans who camp around town several days before the race.

The problem that prompts this request is far too big for any available security and police force to control, the letter said.

"The citizens' personal security rights and protection of property rights, in our minds, outweigh the monetary gains and notoriety that satellite merchants and groups may realize from a Sunday race.

"We realize that this request will not be popular with merchants, hotel and motel operators, the (Indianapolis) chamber of commerce and the '500' festival committee, which has gained a national television coverage of a Saturday parade," the letter added.

Previous races were run on May 30 or Memorial Day.

Merchants, especially motel and hotel owners, applauded the first running of a Sunday race in 1974 because it meant additional business. The lodging operators generally sold most rooms in a three-day package.

The running of the first Sunday race also caused considerable objections from church officials, especially those in the speedway area, where traffic jams were major problems before and after the event.

Law enforcement officials were told Thursday night camping would be prohibited on the 165-acre bottling company property adjacent to the race track. The bottling operation is owned by Hulman.

The area has been a source of major crowd-control problems on past race days.

One Alternative to Outfall Is Feed Plant: Engineer

By HUMPHREY DAVY
Times Staff

The day may not be far off in British Columbia when sanitary waste is converted into compost and feed for farm animals.

Norman Howard, chief engineer for the Capital Regional District, told an environmenta meeting Saturday that CRD has proposed to the provincial government that it test a new sewage treatment plant which converts sewage sludge into proteins for animal feed.

The test plant would be installed at Ganges on Salt Spring Island.

Howard said the high temperature sewage treatment plant has been developed by Prof. Lionel Coultard, of the University of British Columbia.

"The scientist has taken pig manure, converted it into proteins, and fed it back to the pigs," he said.

Sewage water from Coultard's system could also be used for farm irrigation, he said.

The engineer also said he saw the possibility of converting sewage sludge from treatment plants in the Greater Victoria area into compost.

The meeting to discuss sewage treatment in Greater Victoria was sponsored by the Greater Victoria Environmental Centre.

Howard disclosed the proposed treatment plant for Ganges after biologist and environmentalists accused professional engineers of not being receptive to new ideas for recycling sanitary waste.

The engineer said most engineers are well up on new developments but adoption of new systems and inovations depended on what people wanted.

"If people want to give first priority to solving the problem of recycling waste, then we can do something to make use of sewage waste," he said.

Dale Kilshaw, a member of the audience, asked the engineer if other alternatives to diverting sewage into the sea had been considered.

Howard replied that the concept of the Greater Victoria sewage study of disposing sanitary waste from outfalls taken well out to sea, is the most economical.

"And the concept of diverting the North East truck and the Clover Point to Macaulay Point for future treatment is also the most economical arrangement," he added.

He said engineers also looked into an Oak Bay proposal to establish a treatment plant on Trial Island which would have meant drilling a 900 foot hole through volcanic rock.

No engineering firm seemed prepared to undertake such a project because no one had ever drilled to such a depth through volcanic rock, he said.

"Finally a Texan said he was prepared to have a go at it," he said, "but costs would have been high."

Derrick Mallard, president of the Citizens' Association to Save the Environment, said the practice of dumping sludge brimming with nutrients into the sea is wasteful.

"When our cities seriously contemplate shipping sludge thousands of miles to African countries while domestic fertilizers double in cost, you know something is wrong," he said.

Mallard said environmentalists are making no headway in getting the Capital Regional District to consider recycling sanitary waste, such as converting it into compost.

He blamed the lack of action on James Campbell, chairman of the CRD board.

"The regional chairman refuses to discuss this issue with environmental groups," he said. "There is no dialogue between the board and the people."

He said the trouble is the letters patent of the Capital Regional District do not make it necessary for the board to take such matters to the people.

"And he (Campbell) won't listen to anyone," he said.

Gerald Duffield, environmental engineer with the ministry of health, said he is of two minds with respect to the alternatives available for the ultimate disposal of sewage.

"As a citizen I find it somewhat repugnant that this, the Garden City, dumps raw sewage just off its shores," he said.

"I would, perhaps, find it less so if we were a heavily industrialized city," he added. "I suppose this reflects an attitude shared by many, that grubby people can get away with grubby practices."

But he said he could find nothing wrong from a health point of view of discharging sewage from long outfalls.

"I also understand that there is no demonstrable evidence of environmental damage anywhere near the outfall," he said. "Prior to the Macauley Point outfall, the evidence of environmental damage and pollution was plentiful all along the shoreline."

While not opposed to disposing sewage on land, he said, this is not practical in the Greater Victoria area because of the lack of suitable space.

If space was found, he said, it would take a sizeable chunk of land to install such a system.

He said the practice of converting sludge into compost also presents some problems, such as marketing the compost.

If the compost contained a high concentration of metals, it also could not be used for farming, he observed.

But later, biologist Dr. Alan Austin of the University of Victoria said there are recycling systems that could make use of sludge high in metal content.

"You can put sludge metals through a bio-gas plant," he said. "This makes methane."

Austin saw no difficulty in solving the problem of converting waste into useful products.

"There are many avenues of recovery," he said. "Most of them are biological."

Vegetable Woes

VANCOUVER (CP) — British Columbia's potato and process vegetable growers are headed for another low revenue year because of high inventories and poor import protection, according to Larry Jorgenson, manager of the B.C. Coast Vegetable Marketing Board.

"I think that many people thought that drought problems in California and other areas would increase demand and prices for B.C. vegetables," Jorgenson said, "but this has not happened."

Another factor, Jorgenson said, is an 850-million pound potato surplus in the states of Washington and Oregon.

"They are going to have to dump them somewhere, either across the border or in their garbage," he said. The surplus amounts to one-third more than Western Canada's total potato production.

New contract prices are up between six and nine per cent a ton, Jorgenson said, increases which will have to be passed on to consumers. Inventories of corn and peas have depressed prices for those vegetables.

Although prices a ton have increased, market pressures will limit the volumes that can be sold, he said.

University Position For Henley

SACKVILLE, N.B. (CP) — Garney Henley, former offensive and defensive back with Hamilton Tiger-Cats of the Canadian Football League, has been appointed director of physical recreation and athletics at Mount Allison University.

The announcement of the former Schenley Award winner's appointment was made this week by Bob Shaw, general manager and coach of the Ticats, and Dr. W. S. Crawford, Mount Allison president.

Henley, 41, was an assistant coach last year with the Ticats, a team with which he has been associated for 16 years.

He takes up his new duties July 1.

At Mount Allison he will be head coach oft he Hawks of the Atlantic Universities Basketball Conference and help coach the Mount Allison Mounties of the Atlantic Universities Fotball Conference.

Conflict Inquiry Sought Against Ney

NANAIMO — A public inquiry into alleged conflict-of-interest charges against Mayor Frank Ney has been demanded by the Concerned Citizens' Committee (CCC) under its chairman, Pat Barron.

Barron revealed his group filed the interest-conflict charge with the department of municipal affairs over sewer and water bylaws which recently went to referendum. Ney, president of one of Nanaimo's major development companies, vited on a sewer bylaw which Barron claims will benefit his company.

Ney said he did not vote on a water bylaw because of possible conflict but felt the sewer bylaw was too wide-ranging to create similar conflict.

Both bylaws were passed by voters after a year of controversy in which the CCC repeatedly opposed the financing formula of the $15.5 million project.

Meanwhile, R. W. Long, inspector of municipalities, already is conducting a departmental inquiry into the CCC charges against Ney.

PRINCE GEORGE BERTH ON WASHINGTON COAST?

NANAIMO — The cruise ship Prince George may have found a final berth after all.

Chuck Wong, one of four brothers who paid $325,000 for the former B.C. government vessel, confirmed an agreement has been reached to sell the ship to a realtor in South Bend, Wash., where it will be turned into a floating hotel-convention centre.

That was the plan the Wongs had when they brought the 300-foot Prince George to Nanaimo a year ago, but they couldn't find a site.

First choice, an area behind the old downtown arena, was turned down when several groups protested it would not be compatable with a public park there.

Since then, South Bend realtor Gunnar Gunderson has paid $10,000 as an option on the ship. Final details of the sale have yet to be worked out, but Gunderson appears unlikely to have the same location problems faced by the Wongs. A site has already been earmarked near South Bend.

Bastion Leaves Them Laughing With Breezy My Fat Friend

Times Staff

As a closer for the Bastion 1976-77 season, Charles Laurence's My Fat Friend proves to be an excellent choice. "Leave 'em laughing" is a fail-safe theatre prescription for winning new friends and influencing those you have to remain at your side.

Also, this comedy which runs all week at McPherson Playhouse, has something special going — charm of naturalness, good humor and believable human relationships.

A further step in the right direction has been the choice of greatly gifted John Heath as director, and he in turn has come up with a well-balanced quartet of thoroughly competent actors.

The production steps along on a breeze of quips and badinage but just beneath the surface there are other values; recognizable areas of sensitivity — the plight of the chubby woman who is happy being herself but feels that others would appreciate her more if she were thinner.

Susan Wright repeats here the role she played for the Vancouver Arts Club and does it superbly, creating a Vicky for whom one feels the sympathy and affectionate amusement of a close friend.

Her flashes of anger are as believable as the quiet moments she has alone on stage which, abetted by the sure instinct of Heath for rhythm and timing, are wonderfully affecting.

It is hard to imagine the role of Henry, her very-much-at-home lodger, as being better portrayed than it is by Bernard Cuffling.

And while it is the third time round for Cuffling in the part there is a buoyant first-time freshness about his performance.

The implications of homosexuality are handled with a flair that suggests that Henry encourages the immage mischievously but at the same time Cuffling manages to make us aware of a deep and genuine affection warming into love for Vicky.

Cuffling's is a performance as smooth as silk, perfectly timed, light-hearted, well accented and now and then, touching.

Another charming performance is given by David Sereth as James, (also second time round) the Scottish "au pair" lad who helps in Vicky's book store, and cooks the household's meals with the ardor of an amateur gourmet while looking on at events with humorless concern.

Jim McQueen's Tom, the stranger with a taste for tubby girls, who lights the torch Vicky carries through months of strenuous slimming, is played with finesse and conviction. It's a small part but totally effective.

Michael Johnston has provided a delightful set that echoes the charm and humor of the play and Heath has used it and his actors with a sensitive and comic skill that makes My Fat Friend a Bastion highlight for this or any season.

It plays nightly through Saturday with curtain at 8 p.m.

Employment Surge Predicted for U.S.

INCOMES UP IN U.S.

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The U.S. Census Bureau says the purchasing power of U.S. households dopped 3 per cent in 1975.

The median income of U.S. households in 1975 was $11,800, up 5.2 per cent from the year before, it said in a report published Sunday. But this increase was offset by a 9 per cent rise in prices, resulting in a net loss of about 3 per cent in real purchasing power.

The report also said about 8.5 million, or 11 per cent, of the 73 million U.S. households had incomes over $25,000 in 1975 and accounted for nearly one-third of the aggregate income over the U.S.

Another one-third of the total income went to 19 million households with incomes from $15,000 and $25,000.

NEW YORK (UPI) — The head of the U.S. Labor Department's regional Bureau of Labor Statistics Sunday predicted employment across the country and particularly the Northeast was heading for a period of "substantial improvement."

BLS commissioner Herbert L. Bienstock also predicted a "renaissance" in New York in the late 1980's.

"Now while the last 10-year period has been a pretty rough one, let me say . . .! Think we're headed for a period in the mid-80's of substantial improvement in the employment picture throughout the country, and particularly, I think, in the suffering Northeastern part of the United States," Bienstock said.

Bienstock said much of what the country had been through economically in the last quarter century could be traced to the "enormous impact of that postwar baby crop born in 1947."

According to the commissioner, that bulge in the population "discombobulated the school systems" and then poured into the labor market — first as high school dropouts and then as a record high number of college graduates.

"From now, for the next 15 years, this group moves from ages 30 to 45," Bienstock said, "a highly productive period of life, a highly consumption-oriented period of life and I think we're going to see a substantial improvement in economic conditions."

Gems Sell For $5.2M

NEW YORK (Reuter) — A two - day jewel auction has fetched $5,294,825, over $1 million more than expected.

Sotheby Parke Bernet had estimated the value of the jewels at $4,218,300.

The high price was $240,000 for the Kimberley diamond, a champagne-colored gem weighing 55.09 carats, Supported by a platinum necklace set with 80 diamonds, it was bought by an American collector.

The diamond, reported to have come from the Kimberley Mine in South Africa, originally was 490 carats but was cut to 70 carats in 1921 and then to its present size in 1958.

No Cash to Build Nixon Shrine

YORBA LINDA, Calif. (WP) — Once Richard M. Nixon's oldest friends planned a national monument and museum here at the birthplace of the former president. Like other presidential shrines, it was supposed to stand as a testament to a national leader.

But today the men seeking to build an impressive monument to the former president here find themselves without the money to purchase even a small section of the old nine-acre Nixon family property. The little white cottage on a grassy knoll where the 37th president was born remains in the hands of a local financially strapped school district which wants to sell the property to pay for school improvements.

The circumstances around Nixon's resignation almost three years ago are blamed here for drying up potential funds for the monument. "I just don't think the time is right yet," said Hurless Barton, chairman of the Nixon Birthplace Foundation. "Watergate and all that stuff has sort of slowed things up."

Shortly after Nixon was elected president in 1968, Barton and other longtime friends from Yorba Linda, 35 miles south of Los Angeles, sought to purchase the birthplace site. Their goal was to recreate the orange and lemon ranch owned by Frank Nixon, the former president's father, at the time of Nixon's birth in 1913.

Now Barton, an 81-year-old cousin and longtime friend of Nixon, has lowered his sights and is seeking eventually to purchase the home and less than two acres around it. Today a chicken coop and children from the adjacent Richard Nixon School clutter up the birthplace's front yard.

The only thing marking the Nixon birthplace are metal plaques and a small stone marker. The stones gathered by the Birthplace Foundation, come from all 50 states and the District of Columbia.

Foundation members claim their efforts have the full support of the Nixon family. Repeated calls made to Nixon's office in San Clemente were not returned.

Barton said he hopes that the foundation, which has spent some $20,000 on the birthplace site so far, will someday be able to purchase the home and fill it with memorabilia from Nixon's early days. But land prices in Yorba Linda, where the population has doubled to 25,000 in the last 10 years, are soaring, and Barton admits an estimated $100,000 price tag goes far beyond the foundation's current financial capacity.

Convicts Spend Time Earning U Degrees

MATSQUI (CP) — A convicted murderer at the federal prison in this Fraser Valley community was honored Sunday night as the first person in Canada to complete a university degree program while jailed.

Bill MacKey, 37, has a university degree with double majors in sociology and psychology. He is serving a life sentence for non-capital murder and has no chance of parole for at least five years.

Today he will be clearing brush at a federal penitentiary logging site near Agassiz, wondering how he will use his new academic skills for the next few years.

MacKey had a Grade 8 education when he was sentenced in 1973.

Because of his rapid progress through the program, he has been hired as a graudate assistant to help university professors inside Matsqui prison. He will be paid for his work and will pay the prison for his room and board.

He received his degree through a special University of Victoria prison program which has been in operation at Matsqui and the British Columbia Penitentiary in New Westminster since 1972.

Matsqui is the only prison in Canada to offer third- and fourth-year university subjects and some prisoners from the Prairies are being transferred here to complete their degrees.

Prisoners are able to complete a university program in about three years, compared to the usual four years.

A number of students have done some university work in prison, been parolled and are continuing on campuses in Vancouver and Victoria.

Art Lee (L—Vancouver East), guest speaker at the ceremony, told of some of the success stories in the program.

A drug addict, 24, now on parole, is finishing an honors degree at the University of Victoria, and won a scholarship.

Another addict, over 40, will graduate this fall inside Matsqui. He is considered by some academics as one of the 10 best poets in Canada.

A student, 34, in jail for most of his life, is receiving A grades at the University of B.C. and is writing a novel.

Lee said too much media attention has been directed at hostage taking and riots and not enough at the successes in the prison system.

Rabin's Wife Guilty, Fined $26,852

JERUSALEM (AP) — A district judge fined Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin's wife $26,852 for keeping $21,101 in two illegal Washington bank accounts, and Rabin announced he will take an extended leave of absence starting Friday.

Rabin, who was fined $1,611 last week because he was a co-holder of the accounts, said he will turn the government over to Defence Minsiter Shimon Peres. Peres succeeded Rabin as leader of the Labor party after Rabin's attempt to cover up the size of the account failed.

Lift Wheels AFTER Takeoff

SPRINGFIELD, Ohio — Flying student Michael Styles, 29, Louisville, Ky., taking off in a Mooney M-20-F Saturday, retracted his landing gear on takeoff. The problem was the plane wasn't in the air yet.

The plane skidded 400 feet before it was brought under control. Neither Styles nor his instructor were hurt.

SAN DIEGO, Calif. — A judge has given angry car owner Edward Thall permission to bug his dealer.

For the last three weeks, Thall has parked his Volkswagen van in front of the auto agency and paraded with a sign reading "My VW is a lemon. Ask me why."

San Diego Motor Imports sought an injunction to stop Thall and sued for $50,000 damages it claimed represented loss of business.

But Superior Court Judge Daniel Leedy said Thall has the right to his protest as long as he stays on public property and does not prevent customers from entering or leaving the establishment.

PITTSBURGH, Pa. — When Peter Flaherty became mayor of Pittsburgh, he declared that no one would be exempt from parking tickets. The former mayor now knows that the rule holds. He received a ticket Saturday.

"It's the rules, sir," a patrolman was reported to have told him when he expressed surprise.

ROME — Film director Pasquale Squitieri, actress Claudia Cardinale's constant companion, was charged with illegal possession of a firearm today after shots were fired at two photographers outside her home.

Police said the two young free-lance photographers were approaching the actress's suburban villa with telephoto lenses for long-range candid shots when eight bullets whistled around them.

DUBLIN, Ireland, — Cardinal William Conway, Roman Catholic Archbishop of Armagh and Primate of All Ireland, died Sunday at his official reisdence in Armagh, Northern Ireland, at the age of 64, a church spokesman said.

NICOSIA, Cyprus — Cypriot President Makarios is on the way to full recovery from a heart attack suffered two weeks ago and will be able to resume official duties toward the end of this week, the medical team treating the 84-year-old archbishop announced.

DELAWARE, Ohio — Faith healer-evangelist Leroy Jenkins and Linda Peck, a former gospel singer, were married in Jenkins' Holy Hill Cathedral Saturday and then left on a wedding trip to Chicago where the evangelist held a Sunday crusade.

It was the second wedding for both, their prior marriages having ended in divorce.

COLUMBIA, Mo. — Thirty members of the University of Missouri-Columbia scuba club took turns playing poker at the bottom of a swimming pool during the weekend to raise money for the Easter Seals Society.

Three divers started at 4 p.m. Thursday, and ended at 4 p.m. Sunday. William Spath, the club's faculty adviser, said $1,500 was raised.

"Now we're going to go home and sleep for 72 hours," Spath said.

Mike Swoier, one of the participants, said, "It was just great at the bottom of the pool except I wanted to win more at poker."

'There's A Lion In the Yard'

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — Jackie Stone didn't believe her 6-year-old god-daughter when the child burst into her bedroom and yelled: "There's a lion in the backyard."

Ms. Stone replied, "You gotta be kidding."

It was no joke. There was a 6-month-old cougar sniffing the flowers and vegetables Saturday in the backyard.

Tanya's father, Douglas Newall, called the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, which sent a crew to take the cougar to the animal shelter.

Police said the cougar belonged to a family down the street. They said it apparently nuzzled its way out of a window and wandered over to the Newall residence.

The cougar, named Mr. Hiss, went peacefully away with SPCA officers.

Satellite to Open a New Window on the Universe

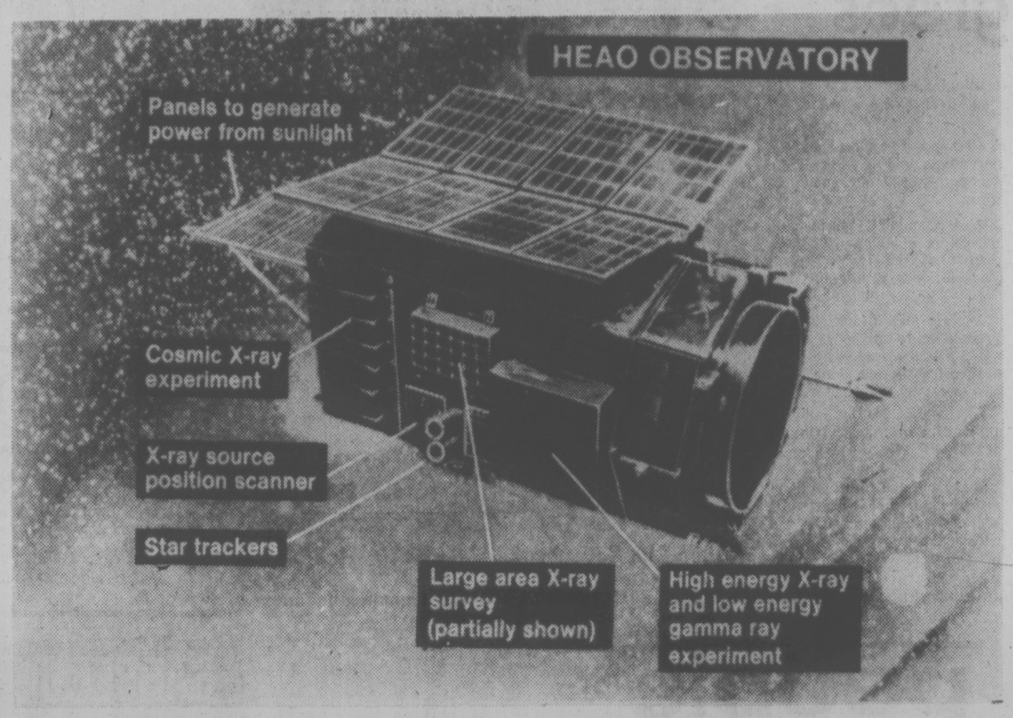
New York Times

NEW YORK — A new type of window will be opened on the universe if all goes well with the launching about April 29 of the largest unmanned satellite yet sent into orbit by the United States.

Observations already made with less powerful and versatile instruments lead scientists to expect that major discoveries will be made. These could relate to the nature of the universe, the energy source of quasars and "exploding" galaxies.

They could also resolve the debate as to whether black holes exist in space. These would be stars that have collapsed to such extreme density that their gravity prevents any light from escaping them or passing near. Scientists who believe that the holes have been detected and scientists who doubt their existence will have instruments on the spacecraft.

The vehicle, known as the High Energy Astronomy Observatory, will make observations of X-ray and gamma ray wavelengths that connot penetrate the atmosphere. It will be the first of three such vehicles. The second and third are to be launched in 1978 and 1979, respectively.



Unmanned observatory satellite to be launched around April 29

The wavelengths to be scanned are the most energetic in nature. X-rays are generated either by extreme heat-material that is "X-ray hot" rather than "white hot" —or by very high energy particles. Gamma rays, as usually defined, are generated by high energy nuclear reactions, as in radioactivity.

The discovery in recent years that explosive events on a scale difficult to explain in terms of conventional physics are occuring in some star systems, or galaxies, has aroused great interest among theorists. Also, the seemingly very distant objects known as quasars are so brilliant that their energy source is a puzzle.

Furthermore, at irregular intervals the Vela satellites placed in very high orbits to watch for the gamma ray flash of a nuclear explosion are recording bursts of gamma rays from somewhere far out in space. X-ray detectors carried aloft by satellites, rockets and balloons have shown not only that some objects are shining primarily at high energy X-ray wavelengths, but also that some pulse in a rhythmic manner.

All these observations have led astro-physicists to believe that major discoveries will be made through more thorough studies of the x-rays, and gamma rays coming from such objects.

Ever since the astronomy observation project was initiated in 1968, it has been given high priority by the Astronomy Missions Board of the National Academy of Sciences.

The original plan was to use a vehicle 40 feet long and weighing 22,000 pounds. Because of budget constraints and other factors, this was scaled down to the present dimensions of 19 feet and 7,000 pounds.

The first and third astronomy observatories will conduct all-sky surveys. The second will be aimed for extended periods at targets of special interest. The Launching of the first was delayed two weeks when it was found that the gyro stabilization system was not functioning properly.

The vehicle will be placed in a relatively low, circular orbit some 275 miles aloft to prevent its penetration into the earth-encircling radiation belts. The elongated hexagonal vehicle will tumble end-over-end, always keeping toward the sun that facet of its six long sides carrying the cells that generate electric power from sunlight.

Its rotation will be slow, about once every half hour. Nudging by gas nozzles will maintain its orientation toward the sun so that as the earth and its artificial satellite circle the sun the x-ray and gamma ray instruments facing out from the vehicle's other long sides will, after six months, have swept the entire sphere of the heavens.

The largest of the four instruments on board is a seven-module array of x-ray detectors developed by the Naval Research Laboratory to map the sky, determining the spectrum, intensity and time variations of x-ray sources there.

Parallel observations will be made by instruments prepared by the other group that has been particularly active in such observations at Harvard University and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. This experiment should be able to pinpoint the locations of sources and determine their structure.

Star trackers will indicate the aim of each instrument at the moment of observation. Detectors of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration and California Institute ot Technology will look for diffuse x-rays, or "cosmic rays."

Another experiment, by M.I.T. and the University of California at San Diego, will look for higher energy x-rays and gamma rays.

The vehicle is to be launched from the Kennedy Space Centre in Florida by an Atlas-Centaur rocket combination. The project has been managed by NASA's Marshall Space Flight Center in Huntsville, Ala., which will manage the in-orbit observations from NASA's Goddard Space Flight Center in Maryland.

Engineers from TRW, the aerospace company that is the prime contractor, will participate, controlling the in-flight manoeuvres.

'UNIQUE' SCULPTURE FOUND IN ARMENIA

MOSCOW (UPI) — Archeologists digging in the Soviet republic of Armenia have unearthed a 3,500-year-old bronze sculpture which they consider one of the most important finds of recent years, the newspaper Selskaya Zhizn said today.

The newspaper said the sculpture was found in an ancient grave site at the village of Lori Berd.

The archeologists described it as a composition showing deer with their young being chased by cheetahs. They called it "unique" and said the craftsmanship was striking.

Also found in the grave site were ritual ceramics with gold and silver decorations, weapons and tools of labor.

Some came from Assyria, Palestine and Syria, indicating close cultural and trade connections with these countries, the archeologists said.

NO GIANTS IN SUN POWER

By ROBERT SOBEL
Washington POST

NEW YORK — The talk along Wall Street for the past few months has been that solar energy could be the next boom industry. This is disquieting to analysts, since none of them seems able to come up with companies that will benefit from the bonanza!

Almost everyone seems to agree (1) tha t only a small fraction of U.S. energy needs can be filled by the sun's power in this century, (2) that central generation — the gathering of large amounts of sun power at a central location — is unfeasible given current technology, and (3) that for the next few years at least, solar power could best be used for heating homes and providing them with hot water.

In other words, the sun isn't going to replace the old well and coal mine during the lives of most Americans who are now working on the problem.

This doesn't mean that much work and energy will not be expended on solar energy during the next decade and more. Nor does it imply that investment opportunities will be lacking.

Rather, it does indicate that there will be no IBM, Exxon or Xerox in this field. Rather, a host of small companies will try to develop new technologies and hardware. By the time they need large amounts of capital, they will have been gobbled up by one or more of the major firms, or perhaps surpassed by them in one way or another.

Furthermore, solar technology is rather simple, at least when compared to that involved with atomic power, or even pertroleum refining. So don't look for breakthroughs in this area, either.

If you are interested in investing in solar power companies, a good beginning could be made by acquiring a copy of "The Coming Energy Boom" by Yale Hirsch. The editor of Smart Money, Hirsch became interested in solar power early in the game and has devoted parts of several issues of his newsletter to companies and technologists. This new publication, a large part of which consists or reprints of Smart Money articles, is little more than a pamphlet. But it does offer constructive advice, though having more than a touch of the sensational about it (the lead article is, "The Solar Age Is About to Be Born!")

Mediterranean Link To North Sea Planned

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (UPI) — The rulers of Serbia had the idea but got nowhere for lack of money and modern technique. But Yugoslav and Greek engineers have dusted off an 1869 plan for a waterway that could link the North Sea with the eastern Mediterranean by the year 2,000.

The best part of the project is that much of it exists already. River-canal systems link North Sea ports with the Danube in Germany. The Danube is navigable and flows south through Austria and into Yugoslavia past Belgrade, from where it continues east to empty into the Black Sea.

And, says Radivoje Mancic, "this waterway will be profitable — the price of river transport is 50 per cent less than that of railroads."

Mancic is an engineer with the Kirilo Slavic Institute, which is working on the project.

The snags are that a couple of rivers would have to made navigable and 104 miles of canals must be built to make the final link for barges of up to 1,350 tons to sail from Europe's largest port of Rotterdam in Holland to the Greek port of Salonica in the south — a distance of 2,400 miles through the heart of Europe.

It also would involve getting the barges up to 1,540 feet above sea level, constructing 64 dams and finding $1:1 billion to finance the undertaking — the biggest of its kind in Yugoslavia.

But work on the project, said Mancic, can start within five years and be completed by year 2000.

Byproducts would be 18 dams big enough to supply hydroelectric power and river regulations doing away with annual flooding of thousands of acres of farmland.

"The canal would be particularly suitable for transport of cargo available in the area along the Morava and Vardar rivers, such as timber and food industry products," he said.

The rulers of landlocked Serbia, now part of Yugoslavia, never gave the North Sea a thought. What they wanted, and could not afford, was a waterway southward to get their pigs and grain cheaply to Salonica.

More than 100 years later the plan captured the imaginations of Greeks and Yugoslavs and led to a joint feasibility study.

The plan is to link the Morava and Vardar rivers, which both spring from the mountains east of Skopje — the Vardar running south to Salonica, the Morava running north and joining up with navigable Danube at Smederevo, 25 miles southeast of Belgrade.

This will require a 60-mile canal. Other bits of canals will make up the total. They will be 143 feet wide and 15 feet deep. And the project is complex because of the varying levels of the Yugoslav rivers running through the mountains. The highest point is at Pcinja, a tributary to the Vardar, 1,540 feet above sea level.

"At the moment we are collecting money through a public loan," said Mancic. "The money will be spent to regulate the Morava.

And this, said Mancic, "is virtually the first stage in materializing the whole project of a waterway from the Danube to the Aegean Sea."

More than 100 years later the plan captured the

Sandy to Ride At Northlands

EDMONTON (CP) — Sandy Hawley of Toronto, four times the leading rider in North America for victories in one season, will ride at Northlands Park in Edmonton when the spring racing season opens Tuesday.

Hawley was named the Eclipse Award winner last year after winning his fourth riding title with 413 victories. He was second aboard 245 mounts and third aboard 201 among his total of 1,637 mounts.

DOG WASN'T GROWLING FOR NOTHING

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (UPI) — Marilyn Parker's dog was making a nuisance of himself and she was getting annoyed.

No matter how often she told him to be quiet, the dog kept growling at a closet door.

She finally opened the door, and there inside was a man, asleep on the floor.

Police booked David Gehrig, 19, on a burglary charge.

IODE . . . 64 Years And Still Serving

elizabeth forbes

With "Services" the theme of the 64th annual meeting of Provincial Chapter I O D E, presently in session at the Empress Hotel, it's interesting to note that report of the order's provincial services secretary, Mrs. S. C. Irving, shows an over-all sum of $58,859.60 used in service work in the province during the past year, by two Municipal, 54 Primary and three Junior chapters.

This work covered "a wide range " Mrs. Irving said.

A handicapped society, a coronary care unit, the Neurological Association, a home for elderly women, a children's hospital, veterans' hospitals, the Cancer Society, the Diabetic Association and a Talking Book Service — all received generous donations.

Special "float" and "alternative pressure" mattresses were provided for bedridden patients; a new water system supplied for a school, and many smaller items such as film, a wall clock and a refrigerator were given where needed.

Parties were arranged and gifts provided for children, the elderly, the sick and the destitute, at the Yuletide. Help was given to send needy children to camps and to transport retarded youngsters to Disneyland.

Supplies went to an Indian workshop and donations to the blind and to intermediate care homes.

Over 11,000 pounds of used clothing were collected and dispersed to hospitals, veterans and needy families.

Thirteen crates containing 1,202 articles were shipped overseas to places like Lesotho, Bangladesh and Nepal. Twenty-nine layettes went to the supervisor of social development at Inuvik.

Members filled 363 nursery and personal property bags. In reporting this service, Mrs. Irving said "one of these bags is often the first and only possession a child has had in its life."

On top of all this it was reported by the services secretary, that in the year, members worked a total of 3,700 voluntary hours at the Cancer Solarium and 5,021 hours for other social services organizations.

Education is another interest of IODE chapters, and in this work the provincial secretary, Mrs. Arthur Evans, gave the total amount spent in British Columbia during the year, as $32,798.

This included assistance to 17 adopted schools; 187 scholarships, bursaries and prizes presented to students from elementary to university level; special education donations to schools and hospital libraries, as well as donations to national educational funds.

Gifts of books, magazines, subscriptions, pictures, as well as tools, dishes, trophies, arts and handicrafts supplies, sport equipment, games, puzzles, fruit and candy went to schools for mentally and physically retarded, to Indian reserve schools and to classes for children with learning disabilities.

MRS. MARQUARDT
provincial president

Donations wsere made to the Seamen's Mission, to boys' clubs and retirement centres.

Mrs. Evans also reported a new provincial education project introduced in the form of an IODE scholarship for the Greater Vancouver Community Music School, with an initial donation of $385.

Further donations will be made each year until the goal of $1,000 needed to establish this scholarship in perpetuity is reached.

Sunday afternoon the provincial president, Mrs. W. J. Marquardt, accompanied by Victoria Municipal Chapter regent, Mrs. Norman Turner, and the provincial vice-president, Mrs. F. H. Elliott, placed a wreath on the Centotaph.

In the evening Victoria Municipal Chapter hosted a reception in the Princess Charlotte Room at the Empress Hotel for delegates who are here from all parts of British Columbia.

Official opening took place in the Crystal Ballroom this morning. Mrs. Turner gave the address of welcome, followed by reports of various officers.

After luncheon a forum was held on "Services," the annual meeting theme, with Mrs. Irving acting as moderator.

Guest speaker was Mrs. Margarite Haines, executive director of the Victoria Bureau of Volunteers.

This evening a reception will be held prior to the annual dinner gathering, where guest speaker will be Mrs. Frances Fleming, acting superintendent for the integrated and supportive services in the provincial ministry of education.

Reports will again be heard tomorrow morning before delegates attend a coffee party in Government House.

Installation of officers for the 1977-78 term will be held on Tuesday afternoon.

"People Helping People" is the IODE motto in British Columbia, and certainly this is exemplified in the work reported and projects completed during the past year.

Continuing projects include the building and furnishing of a senior citizens home or 160 people and the maintainence of a cancer solarium and coffee bar.

Total paid up membership at present stands at 1,205 in this province. In Canada the membership reaches 20,000.

"It's Canada's most progressive women's organization," one member told me.

Then she added, "and in British Columbia it's a long respected order with a modern concept."

Whenever you change jobs from one company to another, ask for all information about any pension benefits you are entitled to take with you. And get it in writing. It can be a valuable piece of paper years from now. If, that is, you store it in a safe place. You might even have it duplicated so that you'll have a copy should the original be misplaced.

Don't count on some of your long-familiar food products staying the same, especially if you're on a low cholesterol diet. A popular imitation coffee "creamer" was made with coconut oil, then it wasn't, now it is again. A liquid margarine was made with safflower oil, now it isn't; it contains hydrogenated oil (saturated fat). Read the contents label before you buy, and you can make use of what you take home.

IT'S BATHING SUIT SHAPE-UP TIME

Ask Jennifer

By JENNIFER ANDERSON

If you've been lax about keeping up your exercise program during the winter months, don't wait any longer to start getting into shape for the fun-in-the-sun months ahead. Slip into last year's bathing suit and take a closer look at yourself in a full-length mirror. You'll get the picture.

Dear Jennifer: My goal is to look good in a bathing suit this summer. I love to swim and last year I missed out on it because I was too shy about my shape to make use of a pool in my apartment building. My thighs are flabby; my hips too wide. I have a roll around the waist — and a potbelly as well. Do you have some miracle exercise program for women like me?— Peggy A.

If being a bathing beauty is your goal, by all means get going immediately as it takes time to reshape the body. You'll be happy to hear beach coverups (intended as protection from the sun) are more often used as portable tents to hide under, by women just like yourself!

A combination of diet and exercise is the most effective way to shape up. Losing five pounds will diminish that potbelly and slim the hips. The rest is up to you and your determination to win your goal.

Here is a neat little routine to help you:

—Potbelly Bends — The good old-fashioned sit-up. Feet tucked under the sofa to ease strain on the back, lie down with arms overhead in a diver's position. Come up to touch feet, building up slowly (starting with five) and adding one a day until you can do 20 with ease. Although tedious, it is one of the best shapers for stomach and midriff.

—Wasp Waist Whittle — Standing erect, arms overhead, feet spread a foot apart, reach down and touch your fingertips to the outside of the right foot, to the centre and to the outside of the left foot — rhythmically: one, two, three, and back to starting position. Repeat five times at first, building up to 20 when you are in better shape.

—Hip Hip Away — Lying flat on your back on the floor, arms extended at shoulder level, raise both legs off floor and cross them over the body to touch the left hand and then come back to starting position. Now raise them up to touch the right hand. Do 10 lifts on each side.

Finish off with a quick and lively bicycling with hands supporting hips. Then bicycle with feet together, just skimming the floor.

—Back and Upper Arm Flab — Standing with feet astride, arms outstretched at shoulder level, describe small circles with the arms — clockwise, then counterclockwise. Tense the arms as you make these circles, 25 iin one direction and then reverse for 25.

If you begin with just these simple exercises — and keep at it — you will see a difference. Remember, too, that choosing a bathing suit as carefully as you would an expensive dress is important. Certain styles will be much more co-operative in hiding some of those problems.

By MICHAEL LAMM

Dear Mike: Please settle an argument. Is it true that a small engine in a big car sometimes gives worse gas mileage than a big engine in a big car? A friend of mine says that a 200-inch Maverick 6 engine in a Ford LTD would give lower gas mileage than a 351-inch V-8. What do you say? — BET'S ON

Dear Bet's: Your friend is right. With a Maverick 6 in an LTD, traffic performance would be so weak that you'd have to keep the throttle wide open much of the time, thus wasting fuel. There's a point of diminishing returns with engine size, just as there is with rear-axle ratio.

Dear Mike: The book says I'm supposed to put five quarts of oil into my 1976 Malibu V-8 with every oil-and-filter change. The dipstick, though, reads full when I put in only four quarts. Am I actually running a quart low? — SUSPICIOUS

Dear Sus: Probably so. Dipsticks don't always tell the truth. Your engine really does need five quarts when you change both oil and filter.

Dear Mike: I have a 1974 Duster with the Slant 6 and automatic transmission. When I come to stop signs I often slow down by shifting manually into second and then into first range on the shift quadrant. In starting out, I also shift by hand through low and second range. Is this bad for the transmission? — SHIFTY

Dear Shifty: Not necessarily. It depdnds on how fast you're travelling when you downshift. The transmission downshifts automatically anyway when you stop your car, but usually at very low speeds. If you're putting a strain on the internal clutches, you might end up with a more expensive transmission repair than a brake job would cost.

Dear Mike: What's going to happen to older high-compression engines that need premium gasoline when this new law goes into effect? I understand that after Jan. 1, 1979, the maximum lead content of premium will be cut to .67 grams per gallon. Won't this cause pinging and even holed pistons with compression ratios at or above 10:1 in older engines? — NOTLOOKINGFORWARD

Dear Not: It should be possible to prevent pinging by retarding the ignition of these engines and by adding thicker head gaskets. True, these engines won't run so well, and it'll be a problem. But apparently leaded gasoline is getting to be an even greater problem.

ADD FOREIGN FLAVOR EASILY

Small touches in accessories and backgrounds can create the atmosphere for an entire room. In fact, the restrained effect is in better taste than a room in which all furniture and accessories are in a distinctive foreign style, such as Oriental or Spanish.

Shown here is a den-guest room, by Ray and Jim Wark, that one identifies as Oriental, yet the upholstered pieces are definitely traditional. The alcove, originally constructed as a wardrobe closet, but with doors removed now serving a different function, sets the theme. Thin, black wooden strips 1"x1" cross the mirror, dividing it into 10"x15" panels. And the doors on the cabinet below echo the pattern in fact, line up with it exactly. Although neither is a traditional Shoji screen, they appear to be so.

Note that the mirror above the cabinet shares the wall equally with a plain space, background for a handsome Oriental picture. Both pictures and mirror benefit by the contrast, and the alcove has more interest than if the mirror covered the total wall area. The Shoji frame can be constructed separately and then superimposed over the mirror and the doors. Or the frames can be put on the wall and on the doors, and the panels fitted into the spaces, which require great accuracy and precision.

Suitor Won't Quit

DEAR ABBY: I am a 52-year-old widow who is being pestered by a bachelor in whom I have no interest. But HE is interested in ME.

I work from 8 to 5, and when I come home I find him puttering around in my garden, or sweeping my garage or driveway.

I told him I am not interested in marriage, sex, love or a live-in companion. He said HE was.

I don't want to have him arrested for trespassing on my property or harassing me, because I don't think he's dangerous.

How can I get this man to leave me alone without going to the law?—NOT THAT LONESOME.

DEAR NOT: Tell him you will have him arrested if he doesn't stay off your property and quit bothering you. And if that doesn't work, you may have to call the police. He may not be dangerous, but you have a right to be left alone.

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I gave our married son (who lives near us) a key to our home so he can come here to check up on things when we're out of town.

Well, it seems that while we're away, he and his wife come in and borrow whatever they want. We don't even know what they've borrowed until we look for something and can't find it. (I refer to serving trays, linen, card tables, garden tools and bottles from our bar!)

We've always been on good terms with our children and want to stay that way, but we think they have their nerve helping themselves to our things and not returning them.

Is there any way we can get our key back and put a stop to this without demanding it and hurting their feelings?—WONDERING PARENTS.

DEAR PARENTS: What's wrong with the direct approach? Simply ask them to return: (a) everything they've borrowed; (b) the key. And don't be bashful about telling them why.

DEAR ABBY: As a professional musician, I know I speak for all pianists and organists who have performed at parties and have wanted to tell the guests the following:

Please do not:

1. Sit on the bench with me and engage me in conversation. It makes it impossible for me to perform.

2. Place drinks on the organ or piano. (I've had whole drinks fall on the keyboard and saturate the organ.)

3. Decide that you can play, too, and then proceed to fiddle with the keys while I am playing.

4. Sing loudly into my ear.

Abby, you would be doing all musicians a tremendous favor if you'd publish this.—R.G.R.,

DEAR R.G.R.: Consider it done

The YWCA Archives collections document the development of the women's voluntary organization from a protestant grass roots movement in 1858 to today's widely diversified two-million-member institution.

Smoke: Ideal Fire Warning

By A. J. HAND

Where there's smoke there's fire. That's the principle behind smoke detectors, the new wave in fire-protection devices for the home. They sound the alarm on smoke, not on fire. And, as it turns out, that's good because a smoke detector can warn you sooner after the outbreak of a fire than a heat-triggered alarm can.

A smoke alarm is just about the best form of fire protection you can buy for your family. But before you buy, it pays to learn a little bit about alarms. Smoke detectors come in two general types: photoelectric alarms and ionization alarms.

Photoelectric alarms contain a lamp and a light-sensitive electric eye. The lamp shines a beam of light past, but not on the electric eye. In clear air, the beam of light is invisible, so the electric eye can't see it. But when smoke enters the alarm, it scatters the beam and makes it visible to the electric eye. That triggers the alarm.

Ionization alarms work on a different principle. They contain a bit of radioactive material that ionizes the air inside the detector, making it conductive to electricity. When smoke enters the alarm, it reduces the conductivity of the air. This triggers an electronic sensing circuit and the alarm sounds off.

Which type is best? It all depends. Photoelectrics are quicker at detecting slow-smoldering fires, but slower to blow the whistle on flaming fires. They must be plugged in to an electrical outlet. This limits flexibility of installation somewhat. And it means the alarm won't work if your house loses power.

Ionization detectors are pretty much the opposite. They're quicker on flaming fires, slower on smoldering fires. And some run on batteries. This simplifies installation, and allows the alarm to work even during a power outage (as long as you keep a fresh battery in the alarm).

So, for the utmost in protection, you'd do well to install a pair of alarms — one of each type. At about $50 each, such an installation would cost around $100. That's not a high price to pay for the double protection two alarms will give you.

Installation: The need for a fire alarm is greatest at night, so the best place to put a single alarm is in a hallway near your bedrooms. This puts the alarm where you can hear it. If you decide to use a two alarm system, place the second alarm — a photoelectric type — downstairs if you have a two-storey house. If your house is all on one floor, place the second alarm near the living area of the house, some distance from the sleeping quarters.

Follow the directions that come with your alarm. Some models are for ceiling mounting, some for wall mounting, and some for both. Don't place alarms in corners or dead ends where smoke will take a long time to collect. If your alarm runs on house current, be sure to plug it into an outlet that is always live, not one that's controlled by a switch.

Once your smoke alarm is in place, don't ignore it. Check it now and then, according to instructions. Some units have test buttons, others require you to test with a puff of tobacco smoke. Detectors will warn you if their batteries are low or their lamps burned out. You can make the most of this fact by keeping spare batteries or bulbs on hand at all times.

indoor gardens

By LYNN AND JOEL RAPP

Take care of the tools that take care of your garden. Don't leave them out to rust in the rain or to disappear under drifts of leaves.

Put them away clean. Get rid of those little bits of dried dirt, wipe off the grass stains. If you want them to look and be sharp, you'll need something more than elbow grease.

There are several products on the market for cleaning and oiling tools. Most are rust-resisters, as well as lubricants. Oil the movable parts and wipe off blades with a little oil on a soft rag.

When tools need sharpening it's best to take them to a lawn mower shop. Some garden centres and hardware stores have this service also. Small tools such as trowels and weed diggers should be put away in boxes or drawers, where they are readily available for use at odd times during the winter.

Don't put away all hoses, but be sure to drain those that are not going to be used during the winter months.

The soaker sprinklers that have hidden under the hedges and in the borders all summer and fall should be wiped clean and drained, coiled loosely and hung up. (Metal hose racks are inexpensive and will pay for themselves by extending the life of the hose.)

Invest in some hooks and holders for tools. The "gripper" clips are practical and cost less thgan a packet of seed.

Hose nozzles should be stored in boxes or drawers.

IRISH STEW

1½ lbs. lean shoulder lamb, cut into 1½" pieces
4 potatoes
4 onions
¼ bay leaf
½ tsp. salt
½ tsp. seasoning salt
1 tbsp. flour
Shake of pepper
2 c. boiling water

Into a medium-large baking dish, for which you have a lid, put the lamb pieces. Mix together the flour, salt, seasoning salt and pepper. Sprinkle them over the meat and turn the meat pieces over to coat them a little. Wash, pare and cut potatoes into eighths. Place over the meat. Peel and slice the onions and place over potatoes. Bury the bay leaf in the centre. Pour the boiling water over all, put on lid and place in oven of 400 deg. Fehr. and bake for 45 minutes, then reduce heat to 300 deg. Fahr. and bake 1¼ hours longer. This does not need to be stirred.

Note: If you cannot be in the kitchen to reduce the temperature, bake the Oven Irish Stew at 325 deg. Fahr. for 2½ hours.

PLANNING SAVES ENERGY

NEWARK, Del. (AP) — You can save energy by planning meals, says Su Matusiak, Delaware extension home economist.

When using the oven, plan a complete oven meal and, if there's room, bake another dish that can be served cold another day.

The Bridge Expert

By FRED KARPIN

On occasion, one is forced to walk a tightrope if he is to avert impending doom. These situations come into being when it is perfectly obvious that if the trump suit is attacked immediately, declarer's defeat is inevitable. And so, with trepidation, one has no choice but to walk the figurative tightrope. The latter was the case in today's deal.

	NORTH ♠ J 10 9 6 ♡ 8 ◇ A 9 4 ♣ Q J 10 6 2
WEST ♠ 5 2 ♡ K J 6 4 ◇ 8 5 3 ♣ 8 7 5 4		EAST ♠ A 7 ♡ A Q 10 5 2 ◇ Q J 10 7 ♣ A 3
	SOUTH ♠ K Q 8 4 3 ♡ 9 7 3 ◇ K 6 2 ♣ K 9

The bidding:

East	South	West	North
1 ♡	1 ♠	2 ♡	3 ♠
4 ♡	Pass	Pass	4 ♠
Dbl.	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Four of ♡.

After winning West's opening heart lead with his ace, East shifted to the diamond queen, South taking the trick with his king. It was perfectly obvious to declarer that if he were to attack the trump suit at once, he would go down. The defenders, upon taking the trump ace, would continue diamonds; and, at the end, they would have won a trick in each suit.

So declarer, at trick three, promptly laid down his king of clubs, to establish a club winner for the discard of his losing diamond. East took the king with the ace, and returned the diamond jack, driving out dummy's ace.

The queen of clubs was then cashed, after which the club jack was laid down. Had the six adversely held clubs been divided 3-3, declarer would have been able to get rid of his losing diamond on this trick.

But East ruffed the third club lead with his seven-spot and, of course, South overruffed with the eight. A heart was then led and trumped in dummy. Now the ten of clubs was led — and South was home safely no matter what East played. If East discarded a heart or a diamond, South would discard his losing diamond. And if East ruffed with the ace of trumps, South, again, would discard his losing diamond.

And so in the nip-and-tuck struggle to avoid the loss of a diamond trick, South emerged victorious. His only losers were a spade, a heart and a club. I think all will agree that South deserved his victory.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

Astrological Forecast for Tuesday, April 19

By SYDNEY OMARR

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Forces tend to be scattered. Hold tight to valuables — refuse to underestimate basic values. One who is "humorous" may be expecting too much for the price of a laugh. Message will be clarified. Accept social invitation. Delay financial deals.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Cycle is such that you gain added insights, you can tear down for ultimate purpose of reconstruction. Aquarius, Leo and Scorpio figure prominently. Position can be strong if you review, become familiar with statistics, basic material.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Get messag eacross. Be analytical: put ideas on paper. Read and write — gain shown through "words." Virgo is in picture. You get valid information concerning one important to your financial-emotional welfare. Avoid unnecessary delays.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Eccentric friend commands attention. Unusual relationship requires a review. Family adjustment, possible residence change comes into focus. Taurus, Libra, Scorpio individuals could be part of scenario. Be diplomatic. Avoid extravagance. Fall in love without taking leave of senses.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You're climbing — but steer clear of those in "fringe areas." You have added pressures, responsibilities, but reward factors also are accented. Love is in picture; road is rocky but you would rather travel it than be without the experience. Capricorn figures prominently.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Long journey, philosophical concept — these come into focus. Plans for future, for distance, for publications are emphasized. Relationship is intensified. Older individual wants to aid, perhaps direct. Member of opposite sex is "nursing" a problem. Try to understand.

LIBRA (Sept 23-Oct. 22): Finish what you start. Aries is in picture and so is another Libra. You get call, message which vindicates views. You feel degree of self-satisfaction. Don't permit this to be transformed into pomposity. Be a gracious winner!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Lie low — wait, observe, piece together bits of information. Be alert to clues. Check rights, permission. Legal matters could be "up in the air." Ambitions are revised. You take a more realistic view. What had been a favorite dream could burst as if a bubble. It will, however, be replaced by what is constructive as contrasted to immature speculations.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Follow through a basic interest — teach, learn, share, get what's coming to you. Rise above politics. Deal with Aquarian who is impulsuve, idealistic, bright and charming. Accent on work, health, ways to advance a cause. You'll see!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Forces tend to be scattered. Give logic equal time with impulse. Member of opposite sex plays important role. Do not make "final decision." Other choices of action are available. You seem intent on creating a dilemma for yourself. Don't.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Shake-up due, domestically and in professional life. Be thoroughly grounded in basic material — get facts, figures straight. Bring priorities into focus. You may be asked to give land, property judgment or appraisal.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Travel plans subject to change. Directions could be delayed or misinterpreted. Relatives are not reliable carriers of information. Gemini, Virgo, Sagittarius persons play key roles in your personal scenario. Emphasis on change, ability to ride with tide.

IF APRIL 19th IS YOUR BIRTHDAY, you are "bossy," original, independent, creative, romantic. Life without love for you would be no life at all. You are impulsive, drawn to Leo and Aquarius persons — and you are recovering from emotional setback. June will be your most memorable month of 1977, a year which features consolidation of assets, efforts. If single, marital status is going to change.

Country-Wide Radio Talk Show Callers Against Separation

TORONTO (CP) — Callers to a country-wide radio talk show on the future of Canada agreed almost unanimously that Canadans should do everything in their power to prevent Quebec separation.

The exception among the 24 callers was an English-speaking man from Chilliwack, who said Quebec separation is inevitable and, as a Canadian citizen, he supports the Parti Quebecois cause.

The caller raised the ire of one of the six hosts of the Saturday program, sponsored by the Canadian Association of Broadcasters and relayed from Winnipeg to 231 Canadian stations, including five in Toronto.

Host John Gilbert of Toronto radio station CHUM told the caller that "you're not a Canadian citizen, fella, if you can get on coast-to-coast radio and say you're for separation."

"I am a Canadian citizen and there's nothing you can do about it," the caller replied.

Names of the callers were not given on the air.

All other participants prefaced their remarks by saying they want Canada to remain united. Most said that promotion of understanding between French-and English-speaking Canadians would ease panic.

Callers reached the program's Winnipeg headquarters by dialing toll-free numbers in their regions. Their comments were translated simultaneously into English or French to correspond with the language used by the station broadcasting the program.

A number of persons said education of children is the best hope for national unity.

An English-speaking man from Winnipeg said schools and youth groups should advocate summer exchange trips between students in Quebec and other parts of Canada instead of sending children on group tours of Europe or the United States.

A French-speaking caller from Quebec said Canada will be truly united when children are able to sit in classrooms together as English-, French- and Jewish - Canadians. He said this does not happen now.

A Trenton, Ont., woman said the federal government spent $4 billion to teach French to civil servants but could have used it instead on French programs in schools.

A few callers criticized Quebec Premier Rene Levesque, the English-language news media and the federal government.

A Halifax man said Levesque is trying to increase support for separation among Quebecers by making French-speaking people believe that all anglophones are against them.

An English-speaking man whose hometown was not given said Levesque's recently-announced language policy removes many English rights and adds fuel to the separation controversy.

RIGHTS EYED IN MANITOBA

WINNIPEG (CP)— The Society of Franco-Manitobans was told Sunday it should ask the provincial government to publish a white paper setting out the rights of minorities in Manitoba just as the recent Quebec government white paper defined the rights of the English minority in that province.

The recommendation was put forht during debate at one of 15 workshops being held at the society's annual meeting.

Panelists agreed that Franco-Manitoban representatives haye not come to terms on what their position should be in relation to the political situation in Quebec.

However, former society president Albert Lepage said he believes most Franco-Manitobans "accept that if Quebec separates, it would tighten the vice-grips."

Lack of French Skill Won't Cost Jobs

MONTREAL (CP) — No one will lose his job simply because he does not speak French after Quebec adopts its new language legislation, Cultural Development Minister Camille Laurin promised during the weekend.

Addressing the first English-speaking audience he has met since release of the government's controversial white paper on language policy two weeks ago, Lauron said he would consider formal legal guarantees that no one would be fired because he does not know French.

"If it becomes necessary to put this into writing, we will do it," Laurin told 400 persons at McGill University.

He said English-speaking store owners would have to employ some French-speaking staff, while an anglophone foreman dealing with francophone employees would be required to learn French.

But if the foreman cannot learn the basic French required for the job, "I think he might be moved to another position where he had no contact with French-speaking employees," the minister said.

Lauron denied suggestions that the white paper's declared intention of making Quebec an officially unilingual province contradicts the federal government's policy of bilingualism.

"Bilingualism pertains to the federal institutions which both nations share in common," he said.

"This has never prevented provinces like Ontario and Manitoba from being massively English in their day-to-day life. I wonder why it should prevent Quebec from being just as massively French."

Laurin pledged that the government would channel funds into continuing education courses to help English-speaking Quebecers to learn French.

He also repeated assurances that the PQ's language policy is not aimed at seeking "revenge" for past injustices suffered by French-Canadians.

Horner Says Tory Party Employing Cash Threat

OTTAWA (CP) — Jack Horner says the national Progressive Conservative party is threatening to withhold $47,000 it owes his Alberta riding of Crowfoot if he crosses the Commons floor to join the Liberals.

Horner, MP for Crowfoot, said Sunday on W5 — a nationally-broadcast CTV Television Network public affairs program — that the money came from two roast, in Edmonton and in Calgary, two months ago.

The roasts were held to help Horner recover some of the expenses incurred when he ran for the national leadership of the party eventually won by Joe Clark.

He said the national party took $15,000 it was entitled to from the roasts, but also was holding back the $47,000 owed him and the Crowfoot riding association for their leadership expenses.

He said this was one consideration stopping him from moving on to the Liberal side of the Commons. Such a move by the outspoken southern Alberta rancher has been expected for several weeks.

Interviewed in Montreal, Clark told W5 he had no knowledge of the decision by the party national executive.

"I didn't realize there was that much money involved," Clark said. "Still, I have made a point to keep clear of such matters."

Horner said he had hoped to make an announcement about crossing party lines earlier than this, but that the $47,000 and other considerations were holding him back.

Still, he said, he remained convinced he could serve better as a Liberal in government than as a Conservative in opposition.

He said he thought his constituents would support him as long as he was an effective MP and several brief interviews from his constituency injected into the program tended to support this view.

Horner said he felt Prime Minister Trudeau had finally taken control of the Liberal party and that the Conservatives would have a difficult time beating them in the next election. He said he thought Trudeau had shown better leadership in the face of the Parti Quebecois election in Quebec Nov. 15 than had Clark and suggested the next election would be won in Ontario rather than in Quebec.

Horner said he was disappointed when Clark won the party national leadership and had felt the party had made a mistake.

But he decided to stay with the Conservatives and serve as best he could. He said he now felt he had fulfilled his obligations to the party.

Systems Act Bothers Lauk

VANCOUVER (CP) — Gary Lauk, New Democratic Party MLA for Vancouver Centre, said Sunday he is concerned that the Crown corporation to be established under the provincial government's new systems act will be a central information-gathering agency not answerable to the legislature.

The legislation was introduced shortly before the house rose for the Easter recess.

Lauk said the bill might save some money, but said he is concerned about a Crown corporation that will have central control of all information concerning 2.5 million British Columbians.

Mexico Relaxes Marijuana Law

MEXICO CITY (WP)—In a move that should make Mexico less perilous for visitors, the Mexican government has decided it will no longer press charges against persons holding small amounts of heroin, cocaine or marijuana that are clearly intended for personal use.

As a result, 15 U.S. citizens have already been secretly handed over to U.S. officials and sent across the border in the last two weeks.

Another 30 should be released by the end of this month when the authorities plan to drop charges against some 2,000 persons who have been arrested, but not yet tried, for possessing small quantities of drugs.

The aim of the decision, attorney general Oscar Flores said in an interview, is to reduce the chances that people are subjected to arbitrary arrests and extortion by police and lawyers when caught just smoking or sniffing tiny amounts.

At present, the attorney general said, Mexico's tough anti-drug laws were lopsided, with too much punishment for the small user.

"Even if the person does not get a long sentence, it may take a year for the trial to come up. And in that time, dishonest police and lawyers have often had a chance to bleed people for money," Flores said.

Every year, almost 3 million American and Canadian tourists visit Mexico and many more cross the border for short trips. As marijuana smoking spread in North America, and anti-drug laws eased, however, the number of Americans caught here with the coveted "Mexican gold" increased. The 15 persons released this month, for example, were all arrested with a few marijuana cigarettes only and held for three to four months.

Such arrests and allegations of subsequent mistreatment and extortion of Americans in Mexican jails had become a serious snarl in U.S.-Mexican relations. As a result, the two countries last year signed a treaty under which Americans could serve their Mexican sentence at home. It cannot take effect, however, until the U.S. Congress specifies and passes enabling legislation.

The unexpected Mexican policy change toward small drug users, however, does not apply to traffickers or pushers. Of the 592 Americans currently held in Mexican jails at least half have been accused of transporting Mexican marijuana or heroin destined for sale elsewhere.

Poppies: Careful Sowing Vital

Poppies used to be a favorite summer flower for the most amateur gardeners to grow. Young children were given a packet of poppy seeds, a small patch of garden soil, and told to sow the seeds.

Sown in this casual way, a few seeds were sure to germinate, grow and produce the delicate, papery flowers we all know today even though by pictures only.

It is the annual type of poppy that is sown outdoors now, the kind known as Shirley-poppies.

These dainty little poppies are the result of years of dedication by an English gardener who noticed one plant in his garden looking quite different to those of the common field poppy.

This one seedling had a thin edge of white to the petals and the stamens were yellow instead of black like the others. The gardener happened to be secretary to the Royal Horticultural Society so realized that experimenting was likely to result in something of interest to all gardeners.

The seed of the one plant was saved, sown the following year and this time a number of plants appeared with the white edges even more pronounced, These also all had the yellow stamens. Continuing through several years of selection, this dedicated gardener finally came up with the Shirley poppies of today in delicate colors and all with yellow centre. And a packet of seeds will come true to the expected mixture of colors.

Poppy seed is very fine so must be sown thinly on top of finely pulverized soil mixed with a little sand. A very light sprinkling of sifted soil is needed to prevent the seeds from drying in the sun before germinating.

The seeds germinate better in cool spring soil than in summer. If dry sunny weather occurs before germination is seen, cover the patch of soil either with pieces of wood lath laid lightly on the soil or with a double thickness of gauze (curtain material) suspended on wood stakes about three inches from the ground. One or tother of these devices prevent heating of the soil and scorching of the emerging seedlings.

Remove the shading a couple of days after germination. Light gentle sprinklings will likely be needed until roots have reached down into moister soil. Don't neglect this need but remember, too, that a saturated topsoil is not wanted.

For best development of the young plants, thin to about six inches apart by pulling out the weakest seedlings. The poppy stems are hairy and so are the leaves but there is no great bulk to the plants. Seedlings do not transplant easily for they have a taproot with very few hair roots.

To keep these (and other) poppies flowering, the seed pods must be removed as soon as petals fall.

The flowers make a delicately lovely table decoration when cut in bud just before the green calyx (bud cover) falls off. Put into water at once, they will last a few days. Left on the plants to open fully, they drop as soon as cut.

A small patch of Shirley-poppies sown now in a sunny garden makes a bright spot of delicate color all summer into fall.

$60-$125 Tax Eyed For Faulty Car Exhaust

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The administration said today that it may charge a tax of between $60 and $125 for any car that puts into the air unacceptable amounts of nitrogen oxides — gases that aggravate asthma and emphysema.

Speaking for President Carter, Environmental Protection Administrator Douglas Costle proposed "tough but fair" amendments to the Clean Air Act which were tougher than the auto makers requested, but not as stringent as tough California standards.

Carter's proposal was a little bit tougher than a measure drawn up in the last Congress. House and senate conferees had agreed on the figures, but the measure eventually died in the Senate.

Costle spent most of a White House briefing discussing nitrogen oxides — "nox," for short — which he said aggravate asthma and emphysema. Children, he added, are especially susceptible.

The nox standard now is an emission of 2.0 grams per mile. The administration proposed a standard of 1.0 by 1981, and should health tests warrant it, to 0.4 by 1983.

Costle said the tax would be determined by what it would cost to install a nox control device — $60-$125.

The automakers propose not reaching the 1.0 nox standard until 1982.

The administration also proposed stricter standards on hydrocarbons and carbon monoxide. Hydrocarbons aggravate asthema and chronic lung disease, and healthy persons can suffer changes in their lung functions, headaches and eye irritation. Carbon monoxide aggravate heart disease, anemia and lung disease, and can affect vision and the central nervous system.

Costle said the administration wanted a hydrocarbon standard 0.14 grams for 1976 cars and a carbon monoxide standard of 3.4 grams by 1981. Almost everyone agrees on the 0.41 hydrocarbon standard, but the auto makers want to go slower on carbon monoxide standards.

Costle said the recommendations "provide a solid environmental foundation" for the energy policy which Carter will propose Wednesday.

"We have made significant progress in cleaning up the air," Costle said. "Many millions of Americans, especially in large metropolitan areas, are beginning to see and feel the difference, but it's not that significant a difference yet."

Other proposals:

—Specifying the levels of additional pollutions in areas that presently have clean air. This is essentially in line with legislation now before Congress.

—Deferring for one year any rulings accomodating industrial growth in areas that already have unclean air.

—Requiring facilities that switch from oil and gas to coal to meet federal standards at conversion and state standards by 1980.

Collection Devised For Space Garbage

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — An aerospace engineer whose colleagues call him the "garbageman of space" has developed a way to pluck orbiting satellites from space and bring them safely back to earth.

The plan is the first practical method devised for clearing about 3,000 man-made objects now littering the galaxy hundreds of miles above the earth, said Dr. Marshall Kaplan of Pennsylvania State University.

Kaplan said he presented the proposal this week to the National Aeronautics Space Administration (NASA), which commissioned his research and is considering the plan for the Space Shuttle program in mid-1979.

The defence department also is "very interested" in the retrieval proposal as a way in which foreign satellites might be captured if they posed a threat to the United States, Kaplan said.

He said the main reason for bringing the space junk back to earth is that scientists might study those that failed and relaunch others, saving millions of dollars. The satellites cost between $2 million and $40 million.

"The biggest obstacle to capturing objects in space is the fact that many of them are spinning or tumbling very quickly, making it unsafe for a retrieval vehicle to link up with a target—particularly if there are people in the object," Kaplan said.

Under the plan, the space shuttle would carry a cargo of water and point a giant nozzle at the spinning satellite. Because water in a vacuum freezes when it strikes an object, the satellite would temporarily be coated with ice. As the ice turned from solid to gas, Kaplan said, it would slow the satellite's momentum, permitting a linkup.

Famous Golfer Dies

OTTAWA (CP) — Alexa Stirling Fraser, a legend in women's golf history, died in hospital here Friday after a long illness. She was 79.

Born Sept. 5, 1897 in Atlanta, Ga., to Dr. and Mrs. Alex Williamson Stirling, Mrs. Fraser was predeceased by her husband, Dr. W. G. Fraser of Ottawa, in 1967.

Among her numerous achievements, Mrs. Fraser won the U.S. national championships three times, the Canadian championships twice and the southern U.S. amateur title three times.

Mrs. Fraser was an honorary member of the Royal Ottawa Golf Club — the only person accorded that honor other than the governor-general of Canada. She won the Royal Ottawa women's tournaments eight times.

Sign . . . Or Else Champion Warned

LONDON (AP) — World light heavyweight champion John Conteh has refused to sign contracts for a Monte Carlo title defence against Miguel Cuello of Argentina and has been warned by British boxing authorities that he risks being stripped of his title.

British Boxing Board of Control secretary Ray Clarke has given Conteh a "sign or else" ultimatum after several weeks of squabbling over the title defence, scheduled for the Monte Carlo Sporting Club May 21.

"He has until the weekend to sign," Clarke said, "otherwise, the World Boxing Council will be informed and they may find they have no alternative but to declare the title vacant."

U.S. Orders Electric Automobiles

WASHINGTON (Reuter) — General Electric Co. and AiResearch Manufacturing Co. have been selected to build experimental electric cars, the U.S. Energy Research and Development Administration (ERDA) announced.

The cars will use improved lead-acid batteries with enough power to drive 75 miles without recharging at speeds of up to 55 miles an hour. The current short range of battery-powered cars is a major handicap to their acceptance.

Each company will build two four-passenger cars designed for city driving.

Island Logging Firm Sells Assets

VANCOUVER (CP) — A meeting of unsecured crediors of Ehattesaht Co-Operative Enterprises Ltd. has approved an offer from S and W Logging Company to buy the logging assets of the financially-troubled firm.

The co-operative owed about $5.3 million — $2.5 million to the major secured creditor, the Bank of Montreal, and more than $1.5 million to unsecured creditors.

The near unanimous decision by the unsecured group, mainly equipment suppliers, means the Vancouver Island logging camp which has been idle for seven months, may be back in production later this year.

The co-operative went into receivership last May, after only six months of operation. It had earlier been heralded as a pilot project for Indian economic development.

Don Gardner, receiver-manager, said the unsecured creditors probably will get 40 cents for each dollar owed and more may be paid at a later time, depending on how profitable the logging operation becomes.

S and W has offered $1.5 million for the co-op's logging equipment, $1.65 million for the right to log the area and a share of its profits from operations. The Bank of Montreal will be paid back in full.

SINGLE PARTY RULE ORDERED IN BRAZIL

RIO DE JANEIRO (WP) — President Ernesto Geisel of Brazil has decreed sweeping changes in basic election laws which in effect will turn the country into a one-party state.

The new statutes, which make it all but impossible for the one legal opposition party here to gain power through the ballot box, voided past promises by Brazil's 13-year-old rightist military-run government to lead the country back to democracy. They also coincided with a growing trend toward long-term authoritarian or official party rule throughout Latin America.

The decrees stopped short of total dictatorship. Brazil still will have a Congress, an opposition party and some free voting. But the official government party, the National Renewal Alliance — known as ARENA — now is virtually guaranteed of coming out best in all major elections, just like the official government party in Mexico.

Geisel, a 68-year-old former army general, wrote the new rules himself, after consulting with a handful of advisers in secret meetings in Brasilia, the capital.

$13M Grant To Tanzania

DAR ES SALAAM (Reuter) — Tanzanian officials announced today they have signed an agreement under which Canada will provide a grant of $13.5 million for use in the first phase of Tanzania's five-year railways development program.

The money is to be used to buy fuel tanks, cold storage and cattle cars and locomotive spare parts.

The program for Canadian assistance to Tanzania's railway system was worked out during a recent visit to the African country by a five-member team from the Canadian International Development Agency (CIDA).

Tough Talk On Energy Due Tonight

By J. P. SMITH
and DAVID S. BRODER
Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The president's message to Congress pointed out that "our energy resources are not inexhaustible, and yet we are permitting waste in their use and production." He called for "legislation to carry forward a broad national program for the prudent utilization and conservation of the nation's energy."

That was Franklin D. Roosevelt addressing the 76th Congress on Feb. 19, 1939. Tonight, 38 years later, after uncounted failures by seven predecessors, President Carter takes up the challenge of convincing Congress and the country that now really serious steps must be taken to protect the United States' energy supply.

The president has decided to ask Congress for a standby gasoline tax — perhaps as high as 50 cents a gallon over the next decade — as part of the energy conservation package, administration officials said today.

The present federal tax on gasoline is 4 cents a gallon. Officials said Carter will seek authority to raise the tax by 5 cents a gallon per year over a span of 10 years.

The Carter speech to the public at 5 p.m. (PST) on all U.S. radio and television networks, his address to Congress Wednesday and the package of legislation that will go to Congress the following Monday represent what Hamilton Jordan, Carter's top aide, calls "the greatest test of the president's political leadership."

No issue in American life is more complex substantively or more dangerous politically than energy. It touches literally every voter, every state and region, every industry.

But if you had to boil down two brief sentences why so many presidents from FDR on have seen their energy plans shot down in flames, you could quote energy consultant Jack Bridges.

It was three years ago that Bridges, a former congressional staff member, was making the rounds on Capitol Hill with a three-dimensional model showing the inexorably widening gap between energy demand and supplies.

After finishing his briefing on the drastic steps that would be needed to close the gap, Bridges says he was told by one New York congressman:

"You're asking me to vote for things that will cost my constituents money and make life less convenient, and they won't see any benefit from it for the next five elections. And I'll tell you something else: If I do what you want, the last four of those elections I'll be out."

6% PAY HIKE FOR POLICE

VANCOUVER (CP) — Vancouver's 950 policemen have accepted a new one-year contract within federal wage guidelines.

Police spokesman Const. Mike Flynn said the agreement provides a six-per-cent pay increase for a first-class constable, bringing the monthly salary up to $1,581.

Ice Talk On TV Reviewed

The CBC is reconsidering the use of microphones near players' benches during hockey telecasts.

The review is being conducted after viewers across Canada heard Philadelphia Flyers' captain Bobby Clarke yell an obscene remark at referee Bruce Hood during the third period of Sunday night's game against the Toronto Maple Leafs.

Clarke's angry comment came after Hood threw one Flyer out of the game and penalized a second Philadelphia player.

The Flyers won 6-5 in overtime.

A CBC spokesman in Vancouver said nine protest calls were picked up by the microphone.

CBC Toronto got 27 calls, Ottawa got two calls and CBC officials in other Canadian centres were still counting other calls today.

"A lot of protests were phoned in," a CBC spokesman said in Toronto. "A lot of children were watching the game."

Asked whether the CBC is reconsidering the use of sound equipment near players' benches, he said the network is reviewing the situation.

The calls to the Vancouver offices of the CBC regarding Clarke's language were the first about comments made by players, a spokesman said.

One caller wanted to know whether the microphone "can be moved further away from the foul mouth of Bobby Clarke."

In an earlier Flyers-Leafs contest, viewers heard Clarke mouth an obscenity when he came back to the players' bench after ending a shift.

$8M Subsidy For Ferries

An $8 million federal subsidy was announced today for ferry, coastal freight and passenger service in B.C.

Under a federal-provincial agreement, the province will decide which services receive financial assistance.

But even as Premier Bill Bennett and federal Transport Minister Otto Lang announced details of the agreement in Vancouver, a squabble erupted over where the money should be used.

Victoria tourist officials demanded that some of the cash be used to cut ferry fares to the Lower Mainland and residents of mid-B.C. and upcoast communities like Ocean Falls said they should get all the cash.

"This isn't a luxury for us, it's a necessity," said Al Demers, chairman of the Coastal Transport Action Committee, a pressure group which has been lobbying the government for improved service for almost a year.

Demers said today there may be some desire to divert some of the federal subsidy to Lower Mainland routes but the money must go the mid and north coast.

The federal government last year abandoned its traditional subsidy to Northland Navigation, a private company providing freight and passenger service to the Ocean Falls-Bella Bella area.

The provincial government stepped in to provide an interim service but residents have been unhappy with the setup.

"We suffered through this winter with poor transportation, but we can't go on like this," Demers said.

"They are crippling our communities."

Demers said he hopes to see a new ferry system set up by this summer because "we just can't make it through another winter."

Pete Tomlinson, a director of the Central Coast Regional District, said he feels regional representation on the ferries board of directors would certainly help the situation.

Bennett announced directors from the middle and upper coast areas will be appointed to the board of the B.C. Ferries Corporation. A cabinet meeting Thursday will discuss allocation of the funds:

Lang said the $8 million doubles the amount formerly given to private companies in subsidies which were discontinued last fall.

"We are delighted with this agreement because it deals with the long-standing complaint about lack of ferry services," said Lang.

"We have accepted B.C.'s approach with this form of assistance as a connector to northern areas.

"It will be a decentralization of services and there will be one authority for better administration."

The agreement will be reviewed after a five-year period. The federal contribution next year will equal the $8 million subsidy adjusted to the consumer price index for the city of Vancouver.

B.C. also agreed to assume

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — Jack munro, regional vice-president of the International Woodworkers of America, said Sunday that employees in the forest industry should tell employers they are fed up with the way things are being done.

"We've got to keep cool and prove we are serious," said Munro in a speech to the annual convention of the union's Local 1-424. "Tell your employer this every day."

Munro forecast a difficult year for the forestry workers, who sit down with management today to negotiate a new industry-wide contract.

Munro repeated the union's demand for a single master agreemnt for the entire province, a suggestion that companies in the coast and interior regions of the province have rejected.

"We want one agreement and one pension plan, not three," he said, adding that employers in various regions of the province are trying to maintain their own little kingdoms at the expense of the working man.

Dave Stupich, finance minister in the former New Democratic Party government, told the convention that unions must become more active politically to fight detrimental legislation.

Unions have a responsibility to work in the political arena, he said.

Don Muirhead, president of Local 1-424, warned that employers in the province are still hoping to impose some form of right-to-work legislation.

"If they ever succeed," Muirhead said, "this province will see the biggest strike action ever taken."

Munro said right to work legislation, which would abolish closed union shops, should actually be called "right to scab legislation."

Meanwhile, Don Lanskail, president of the Council of Forest Industries, called on the provincial government for a tax break.

Lanskail said Sunday the province should come up with a more equitable forest in-

Petty Arson Plagues Victoria Firefighters

Small arson fires continued to plague the Victoria fire department over the weekend, and officials are concerned about the tie-up of equipment and manpower.

FirefightersS aturday night responded to a number of false alarms and two small fires in the 500-block Yates.

These followed five small arson fires Friday night.

A fire crew was returning from a false alarm on Gorge Road just after 8:30 p.m. Staurday when it was redirected to extinguish a blaze in a commercial gargage container behind the Meatmarket restaurant on Yates.

Six minutes later, the fire crew rushed into the adjacent Yates Street parkade to fight a fire which gutted a car, causing about $1,000 damage.

Fire officials believe all seven fires Friday and Saturday nights were deliberately set.

Deputy Chief Mike Heppell said today that these fires take equipment and manpower away from their centrally located stations, and could cause a delay in responding to a serious fire where lives are endangered.

There is also the constant worry of an accident every time a large fire truck is driven through downtown traffic, he said.

The fire department is urging merchants and property owners, particularly in the city's downtwon area, to clean up refuse and rubbish since arsonists often set blazes in garbage disposal areas.

Cautious Optimism Felt

SALISBURY (Reuter) — Foreign Secretary David Owen of Britain has left an air of cautious optimism here that the future of Rhodesia can be settled peacefully.

But in black African capitals he visited during his week-long tour of southern Africa, which ended Sunday, the predominant view is that a settlement without bloodshed depends on the nationalist guerrillas being prepared to compromise.

The five "front-line" states facing Rhodesia—Botswana, Mozambique, Angola, Zambia and Tanzania—by deciding to recognize only the Patriotic Front of Robert Mugabe and Joshua Nkomo as black nationalist successors to Ian Smith's white-minority Rhodesian government have strengthened the front's bargaining power.

But Owen was quoted by the Angolan news agency during his visit to Luanda Sunday as saying "I must consult all nationalist opinions and I am sure that six million people that are going to live under the new constitution will also want their voices heard."

The Patriotic Front said in a statement issued in Dar es Salaam on Saturday that Britain has no intention of transferring power to black Rhodesians.

In Prague on Friday, Nkomo called the constitutional conference proposed by Britain "another futile exercise which Owen himself knows will end in failure."

Owen avoided criticism of the guerrilla movement, telling Rhodesian television viewers Sunday that "nationalists who embraced the cause of war are essentially men of good will being driven to take up arms."

Although their supporters believe those who have chosen armed struggle represent the force of nationalist opinion, he will have to consult all liberation movements, Owen said.

Rats, Mice Increase, but No Epidemic

By MARK HUME
Times Staff

Because of B.C.'s mild winter and spring some lower mainland public health officials are gearing up for population explosions among rats and other pests

But Victoria area experts say there's no reason for alarm here.

S. F. Condrashoff, a biologist who runs Professional Ecological Services, says he's noted an upswing in calls recently from people faced with rat or mice problems, "but while the increase is noticeable, it's certainly not an epidemic."

Candrashoff said that while the mild climate may help rats and mice in their reproduction, "the weather's not likely to make that much of a difference year to year — it's almost always mild here on the coast."

He said that the real key to rat population is not so much climate as food availability. When there's lots of food there'll be lots of mice and rats.

Condrashoff said that people who experience rat problems this spring should attack the pests in three ways.

The first move, he said, is to seal up all cracks, crevices and drainholes that will allow the rodents access to a building.

The second step is to remove any material the animals might utilize for nesting purposes and to isolate any food sources.

The final step is to trap out those animals which were inside the building when all the openings were sealed.

Condrashoff stressed that trapping the rats while leaving some accesses for them "is like leaving the screen door open and killing the flies as they come in."

Esquimalt's municipal engineer, Mac Campbell, says there's been a slight increase in the number of calls from people with rat problems in his municipality, "but really it's very minor — it's by no means an epidemic."

Campbell said the mild winter and spring would probably mean rat and mice populations would increase this summer but he wasn't expecting the increase to be too significant.

WORKED TO DEATH, U.K. MPs COMPLAIN

LONDON (UPI) — Members of Britain's parliament today complained their work is killing them.

"It is more than the human frame can bear," said Mrs. Renee Short, a Labor member of parliament, following the weekend death from a heart attack of Sir Peter Kirk, 48.

His death was blamed on pressure and overwork. Kirk was a Conservative member of the House of Commons and his party's top man in the European parliament.

"The strain of representing a constituency and doing a job in Europe is too much," said Kenneth Baker, Kirk's selection agent. "We are needlessly sacrificing valuable people."

Kirk was the sixth member of parliament to die in two years, all of heart trouble.

The Battle Of the Bulge

A Push Away From the Table Isn't Enough

By PAT DUFOUR
Times Staff

Nutrition Canada says 60 per cent of Canadians are too fat.

A Times survey shows that Victorians try to beat this problem of the affluent age in many ways.

There are those who depend on hospital outpatient diet counselling for guidance.

Provincial civil servants have their own obesity clinic in which to fight the battle of the bulge.

There's an obesity clinic run in the basement of one general practitioner's home.

Weight Watchers and TOPS (Take Off Pounds Sensibly) are another way of battling the bulges.

And there are those who agonize alone, living on starvation diets, juggling menus.

Professionals since the early 1970s have been using the phrase "behavior modification" when helping obese patients.

This means simply pushing yourself away from the table isn't enough.

Dr. J. E. Petersen explains at the obesity clinic which he and Dr. R. G. McLean run in McLean's basement that patients are taught to examine the faulty lifestyles that cause their obesity in the first place.

"There are all sorts of stimuli (for overeating)," he said. "The most natural one is hunger. Then there's watching teleyision . . . but the biggest ones are emotion, boredom, anger and depression.

The two doctors have been running the clinic for four years. They began it because they both were overweight and aware of the problem.

Petersen at that time weighed 195 pounds. he peeled off 30 pounds, most of which have stayed off due to readjusted behavior patterns.

The two general hospitals both provide outpatient diet counselling services.

Mary O'Brien chief dietitian at Royal Jubilee Hospital reports 1,177 people were referred to them in 1976. Of these, 258 or 22 per cent were obese.

The percentage was almost double, 43 per cent, at the Victoria General Hospital.

Mrs. Joyce Nordwall, chief dietitian at the hospital, stresses that nutrition education should start early.

"More nutrition should start in the schools as soon as a child can read," she said. "Cartoons, for instance, would be a good way to do this.

"Many children have never had brown bread, as an example. I'm not saying white bread is no good at all, but the quality is no way as good as 100 percent whole wheat."

She said the reason 100 per cent wholewheat bread is so expensive is because, the demand being less, it is not mass-produced.

"In the Second World War Britain had a national loaf. They had to eat that. There was nothing else . . . and they were healthier," she said.

Nordwall said schools could help by getting rid of non-nutritious items, such as candy and soft drinks in vending machines, and replacing them with nutritious items, such as fruit juices.

Even the hamburger habit need not be a bad one, Nordwall said.

"If the hamburger bun is 100 per cent wholewheat, and taken with cole slaw and a glass of milk, it is a rounded meal," she said. "If children chose fish, French fries and cole slaw, that would be fine. Instead, they just take chips and gravy."

Weight Watchers has an established reputation among those who need help in fighting fat.

Mrs. Norma Barton, supervisor for Vancouver Island, reports WW has 109 branches in British Columbia with 6,500 people, ranging in age from 10 to the late 70s, taking part.

She, too, says WW is stressing behavior modification is the only way in which to take off pounds permanently.

"Diet is not the only answer. That isn't going to help much when the real problem is you can't stand your mother-in-law," she said.

"We're trying to teach people they must change their habits and get them asking 'How can I change my habits?' "

She said WW, through using behavior modification as part of its program, has been able to develop diets that are not as restrictive as ones used in earlier years.

Jane Noble, nutrition consultant for the provincial health department, is also convinced behavior modification is an important key.

"It's important to discover what type of emotion causes the problem. There has to be a complete change of eating habits," she said.

Provincial civil servants have an occupational health centre on Superior to help them grapple with obesity. It is open from 7:30 a.m. to 6 p.m. each work day.

Centre nutritionist Elspeth Charlsley reports industry and business are also seriously interested in providing such centres.

"Some large companies are thinking of doing it this way," she said. "They're finding they're getting much better attendance rates and much less illness."

Charsley said the provincial centre is still on a project basis.

Petersen and others working with obese patients stress that exercise is an important part of any reducing program. One man who has had success in hi weight-reducing program, agreed with Petersen that exercise is essential.

In the period from Jan. 2 to mid-March he went from 180 to 155 pounds. His weight remains stable.

He jogs a mile twice a week, swims and has a sauna once a week, and plays squash twice a week.

He cut out eating between meals, reduced the amount of sugar in his coffee from three to one spoon and drastically cut his starch intake for the

"But I had an added bonus," he admitted." There are four of us in the family and three of us were dieting. All of us, including my wife and daughter, lost weight."

Firefighters Accept 8%

Victoria city firefighters and the Greater Victoria Labor Relations Association agreed today on an eight-per-cent wage increase for 1977.

The agreement came only minutes after a binding arbitration hearing began this morning.

The union had originally sought parity with Vancouver firemen, but last week dropped that demand and requested the eight per cent allowable under Anti-Inflation Board guidelines.

Vancouver, however, just settled for a six-per-cent increase so the local firefighters' eight per cent brings them "very close" to their Vancouver counterparts, a union spokesman said today.

Meanwhile, the hearing continued to discuss fringe benefits. The firefighters are seeking first-aid pay equivalent to the IWA industrial rate.

They are also seeking improvements in the holiday structure and shift differential.

Firmer Leadership, Small Schools Urged

Canada's public schools should emulate the example of private schools in becoming smaller, adopting a basic curriculum, providing compulsory extra-curricular activities and emphasizing adult leadership and concern for the development of character, a Rotary conference was told Saturday.

Industrial consultant and educator H. C. Wilkinson, who is deputy chairman of the board of governors of Shawnigan School, said that until these five practices are accepted back into the public school system "the majority of children will be denied the education and training they need."

He was one of the speakers at a weekend conference in Victoria attended by 1,100 Rotary delegates f rom Vancouver Island and Washington state.

Wilkinson noted that while independent schools seldom exceed an enrolment of 500 students, small school units have become a rarity in the public educational system.

"They are victims of intensive teacher specialization in an ever-broadened curriculum, the attempt to spread fixed administrative costs over larger enrolments and, also, misplaced faith and pride in magnificent facilities and equipment."

Of the five essential practices, Wilkinson said the most crucial is firm leadership of children by principals and teachers.

"It pre-supposes that children should not be allowed to behave just as they wish, nor should they choose exectly how they will occupy their time. It infers discipline and standards.

"It requires guidance, example, supervision and control, not only in the classroom but at play and in their relationships with fellow students as well as adults.

"It has been strongly criticized and, in some school systems, almost totally eradicated."

Show Goes On

Two circus shows were held at St. Joseph's School grounds in Saanich on Sunday despite an accident the previous day in which bleachers collapsed.

There were no serious injuries. About six people, including children, were taken to Royal Jubilee Hospital and later released.

The Circus, Dewayne Bros. Circus of Seattle, was sponsored by the Victoria Unit No. 12, Army, Navy and Air Force Veterans of Canada. All proceeds will go to the organization's senior citizen housing project on Darwin.

Secretary-manager Harold Shepherd, who was at the circus when the bleachers collapsed, said today, "I was pretty scared. I thought there would be a bunch of broken bones but there were just a few bruises, that's all."

Shepherd said a prank telephone call might have contributed to the accident. A person had phoned, saying they represented the ANAFVC and cancelled the licence from Saanich to cover the circus shows.

When the group went to pick up its licence they were told it was cancelled.

A last-minute licence was granted by council before its Tuesday budget session because, Mayor Ed Lum said, the ANAFVC had already sold 6,000 tickets.

Normally, the licensing department processes it through the fire inspection office. There had not been time for this to be done.

Had it reached his department, fire chief Harold Gains said today, checks would have been made on crowd capacity, as well as fire exits and extinguishers.

Union Blocks Student Jobs —Official

Between 20 and 25 students may lose out on summer jobs because of the stand made by the Saanich local of the Canadian Union of Public Employees.

Municipal administrator Bill Tremayne said today the municipality will not be able to take advantage of the provincial government's youth employment program unless the union changes its stand on rates of pay.

Under the program, the students must be between 15 and 24 and would be paid at the rate of $22.50 a day. The Saanich local, however, insists the students be paid union rates.

Tremayne said Saanich had applied for the grant for such projects as traffic counts and cleanup work at bus stops.

"They would not steal any jobs from the union at all. It seems silly to stop these kids from getting jobs," he said, adding some of the students losing out might even be children of Saanich employees.

A union spokesman, who did not want to be identified, confirmed that Tremayne has written the union asking them to reconsider their stand.

"It has been the past policy of the union that anyone hired by the corporation is paid union rates," the spokesman said.

Refusing to be more specific, the spokesman said a "special executive" may be called on the matter.

Just When Does One Become a Tourist?

FOND THOUGH WE REMAIN of the Campbell River district where we live, there are times when my wife and I hanker to refresh our acquaintance with Victoria. And when we and other up-Islanders shove off for a holiday in Canada's most beautiful city, our rating auotmatically changes.

e become members of that sougt-after species, the tourist.

We know it, but it's obvious that those concerned with the health of Vancouver Island's struggling tourist trade manage to remain unaware of the fact. Otherwise, they would open their eyes to a valuable though neglected asset and do more to foster it.

The same holds true in reverse. Our up-Island tourist people could go considerably farther than they do in attracting the Victorian-turned-tourist who points his rig north up the highway.

Far pastures may seem greener. When we think of tourists, we tend to define the breed as visitors with American or out-of-province plates on their vehicles. But I suspect the bread-and-butter of the trade is the Island-dwelling couple or family that seeks a change of scene on the home side of the Strait.

We are dependable. Like the salmon, we have a way of returning to our own rivers. But when we have spawned our dollars — which as a point of observation we seem to do more generously than our American counterparts— we don't necessarily fade away. We keep coming back.

Also, unlike the American tourist, our season isn't confined to the summer months. Nor are we affected by our provincial government's brand ferryfares , which keep mainland visitors away from these shoes in droves.

The American tourist, in fact, is pie in the sky. He may materialize, and he may not. Last year, his country's bicentennial celebrations helped keep his numbers down. Vancouver Island is oly one of numerous noliday areas that compete for him.

He further differs from the typical Island rainbird, in that he is peculiarly sensitiveto a bad-weather summer. After all, why venture north to be drizzled on when he can find sunshine in Arizona or Mexico?

In terms of tourist revenue, he is, has been and will remain an uncertain quantity.

But the short-haul tourist who lies to get about on his home island is always with us. Perhaps that's why an industry to which he makes a vital contribution virtually ignoes him.

Islande ron tour in Victoria, I could stand considerably more wooing. If it isn't forthcoming, I may even be tempted to start by-passing Victoria for Seattle or Olympia, where the welcome is warmer.

The up-Islander who ventures south to British Columbia's capital doesn't expect red carpet treatment. What he would appreciate — and what he doesn't receive — is information that would make his stay more enjoyable.

Hew or she would like to know what's going on in the ton.

If a high-rated entertainment is scheduled, let him know about it in time to shape his trip plans accordingly. The same for parades, celebrations, fairs, interesting sports events, flower shows, bargain days, and other city highlights that appeal to the close-to home tourist.

What attractions does Victoria offer to the visitingfamsports events, flower shows, bargain days, and other city highlights that appeal to the close-to home tourist.

What attractions does Victoria offer to the visiting family? Where does one take the kids? What's to see and do? How do the prices run and what can the traveller of limited means expect for his dollars?

Those aren't hypothetical questions. As former Victoria residents, Win and I are asked them each year by up-Islanders who contemplate a holiday in Vancouver Island's only sizeable city, but hesitate because that city remains a closed package.

Modesty may be a virtue, bit it can be overdone. The city with something to sell to its neighbors shouldn't be backward about letting the fact be known. In five years, the only tourist pitch from Victoria to comeou r way has been from a motor hotel that offers special rates to Christmas shoppers from these well-populated outlands.

Victoria could use more enterprise of that sort. The hotel manager recognizes the existence of a built-in, home-grown tourist trade that waits to be tapped.

When that discovery becomes general, and when it is effectively acted upon, I suggest there will be less crying of blue ruin in those off-years when the American tourist run is at low ebb.

Q. I am interested in an article in the March paper about the salvage of the Titanic. Where can I contact Douglas Wooley or any other person who knows him. A.H.

A. The story on Wooley, the London engineer pioneering a project to raise the Titanic, came to us from The Associated Press in London, England. If you write them at 83-86 Faringdon Street, London, EC4A 4BR, they should be able to give you his address.

Q. Can youn give me names and addresses of movie producers? My book might be suitable for an interesting movie. D. St.

A. There is no directory of movie producers. Your best bet might be to examine magazines for writers on most newsstands which list authors' agents.

Q. Where can I write to Richard Hatch, co-star on the Streets of an Francisco.
